

The Intelligencer.

OFFICE: No. 15 Quay Street. SATURDAY, MARCH 23, 1872.

The Register is so greatly pleased, with what we said the other morning about imports and revenues, that it is a pity its editor could not better understand the drift of it.

Humors of Misapprehension.—Our friend of the Register extracts a little amusement from a dispatch in our columns which related how certain gentlemen had been appointed by the Governor of Ohio "as administrators of peace, to look after the peace of the State."

But this was hardly funnier than our Paris dispatch yesterday morning, which solemnly announced that it had been proven on BAZAINE, who is being tried by a court martial, that he had "died" with Prince CHARLES a short time before the surrender.

Hardly less comical was a telegram in yesterday's Register announcing the death of Dr. E. G. MARSHALL, of Madison Wis., and explaining that "he had died a post mortem examination of the body of a patient, and having a long nail on his finger, the virus penetrated his system, from the effects of which he died."

While funny mistakes are continually getting into the papers the best (or worst) ones are generally caught on the fly by the proof readers. One or two that now occur to us may serve to illustrate. Our friend "G. P." in his letter the other day alluded to the managers of the Chase movement as "these Merry Wives of Windsor." But the compositor who was not well read up in Shakespeare as he might have been, translated it "many wives of wisdom" (whatever that may be).

When Mr. GREELY lectured here in September 1870, under the auspices of the Wheeling Library Association, a criticism of the lecture was contributed to our columns by Mr. J. B. WOLFE. Mr. Wolfe had made some reference to the Library Association (abbreviating thus "Lib. Ass.") and this allusion when it came to the hands of the proof reader was found to refer to the Philosopher of the Tribune as the "lib ass!" A pretty narrow escape for us from giving serious offence. At another time in some religious report or article occurred the quotation "Hear the voice of the Master in the Word!" This was set by a young man recently from the country whose religious education had been somewhat neglected, and he beautifully rendered it "Hear the voice of the martin in the word!" A very pleasant thing indeed to hear but not quite apropos just then and there.

Mr. JOSEPH HARRIS, of Moundsville, the nurseryman, says that when the mercury falls to 16 deg. below zero, we need not expect any peaches the following summer, and that, in examining the trees this spring, he finds the buds are killed, and that some of the old trees are permanently injured. Mr. HARRIS advised his business recently in the WEEKLY INTELLIGENCER, and he informs us that in a short time he had more orders than he can possibly fill, and others are still coming. His experience is that when you have anything to sell, it pays to advertise it.

The Chicago Tribune, which has always been regarded as an uncompromising free trade organ, comes out with a leading editorial, which we reproduce, in favor of HORACE GREELY, the one strong champion of a protective tariff, as a candidate for Vice President, notwithstanding their differences on this question.

A PLAN for the grand jubilee Coliseum has been accepted. This neat little edifice is to cover five acres of land and to cost a quarter of a million of dollars. It is to be 400 feet wide and 550 long, the auditorium occupying 312 feet of its depth, and the space allotted to the orchestra and chorus 238 feet. At each end of the building there is to be a tower 50 feet by 60 and 200 feet high, of a highly ornamental character. There is to be a gallery around these towers at the height of 100 feet, which will enable visitors to behold all the glories of the "Hub" spread out before them. All the details of the structure, are, of course, given in the Boston papers, but they are better left to the imagination.

The ordinary tribulations of this imperfect sphere of existence seem to afflict the people of the West, though nature has done so much to make them happy. A wretched husband in St. Paul advertises for the recovery of his wife, "a tall woman with gray eyes, and a small babe just beginning to walk," who have been appropriated by "a tall pok market feller, with red hair."

Greely for Vice-President.

The indications are daily increasing that no Democratic ticket will be nominated for the next National campaign, and that the contest will be between Republican candidates. Anticipating the shaping of events, a movement has been set on foot in the Eastern States to nominate Horace Greely for Vice President.

If the editor of so great a newspaper as the New York Tribune can come down from his high position to preside over the United States Senate, then we are bound to say that Mr. Greely's name would be the strongest and most popular that was ever submitted to the suffrages of the people for the Vice Presidency.

This is, in part, the natural effect of his position at the head of a Republican newspaper, which has always been a leader rather than a follower of the party. At the same time, not a man nor journal ever doubted Mr. Greely's integrity of purpose, his broad patriotism, his anti-slavery character, or his intent, in all that has been said and done, to serve the best interests of the whole American people.

He is known to the people in many capacities, as the founder and editor of the most widely circulated journal in the country—a journal distinctively devoted to the cause of free labor, and one of the most pure in its moral and political influence published; as a bold political economist; as an author of a series of works, hastily prepared in part, but generally popular, and all animated by the most hopeful faith in progress, in industry, and in the intelligence of the people; as a lecturer before agricultural fairs and lyceums, which he has often traveled thousands of miles to gratify, at the same time affording himself the highest possible pleasure, in becoming better acquainted with American farmers and mechanics, their wants, progress and opinions.

Final Repudiation of a Third of the Virginia Debt. RICHMOND, VA., March 20.—The bill repudiating all liability for the one-third of the State debt assigned to West Virginia passed in the Senate to-day, and goes to the Governor. This repudiates the certificates issued under the Funding act, and known as the West Virginia Certificates. The Governor will probably veto this bill, but it will become a law notwithstanding. As West Virginia has declared she is not liable for any of the debt, this places these certificates in a very awkward position.

LIFE in Colorado seems to be favorable to the development of a peculiarly inflammable disposition of mind. A few days ago, near Denver, two high spirited gentlemen got into a fierce quarrel concerning the size of some potatoes before them on the breakfast table, whereupon one assailed the other with a butcher knife, and was himself speedily placed beyond the occasion for further concern on the subject of potatoes with a pistol. It was no doubt a matter of vast importance to settle the size of those potatoes, and what is one life compared to the establishment of a great fact? There is one little drawback, however—the question was not settled after all.

THERE is said to be a fool at woman in Louisville, Ky., who paid $500 for having her face tattooed in the most elegant manner. The work was very neatly done and warranted to last three years. The fee of $500 was, however, a very small part of the cost. The poison contained in the enamel has paralyzed the muscles of the face and distorted a visage once not uncomely to a state of utter hideousness. It is but poetical justice that a foolish and unjustifiable attempt to produce beauty should result in producing hopeless deformity. It is hard but just.

An Indianapolis man imperilled his life, cut his hands, and bruised himself generally a few days ago, in stopping a runaway horse which a lady had left untied. When the lady driver came up she commenced scolding about the dirty buggy and muddy reins, and wound up by telling him to get some paper and wipe off the mud.
