The Necessity for the Electoral Commission.

Senator Blaine did not favor the organization of the Electoral Tribunal. His plan was as follows: "A much better plan of settlement which should be the 'defeated candidate' to appeal to the Supreme Court, case within thirty days. With such a law we could have gone on in the old constitutional way to open and count the vote. The decision of the Court would have carried far greater weight with the people than will that of the Commission."

The Chicago Tribune lets all the wind out of such a project at one puncture, by propounding the following interrogatory: "To begin with, who was to determine which one should be the 'defeated candidate' to appeal to the Supreme Court? This was the vital point in the controversy. Had there been a clearly lawful way for awarding the Presidency to either candidate, no such law as Mr. Blaine speaks of could have been passed, because the successful party would not have agreed to it."

The Tribune has, in these few lines, stated the case in a nutshell. There was an overwhelming necessity to adopt the Electoral Commission compromise scheme. Had all the Republicans at Washington been as stubborn and intractable as Senator Morton, we should have had trouble on the 4th of March—no doubt of it. The elements of mischief were on hand. Even now, with the great weight of the decision against them, there is a revolutionary and incendiary feeling animating some of the Democratic Congressmen, and many of the Democratic newspapers. We quote from the St. Louis Times, the bull-dozer's organ of Missouri border ruffianism:

"We cannot say that the Democratic House will do, but we have no difficulty in announcing what it ought to do. It ought to prevent the consummation of Morton and Chandler's conspiracy at the sacrifice of every other interest committed to its charge. This it can do, and this it should do. [Morton and Chandler opposed the Arbitration Plan with all their might. Thurman, of Ohio, Boggs, of Missouri, Kernan, of New York, Hayward, of Delaware, Hewitt, of New York, and Democrats of that sort helped to make it, and urged its adoption.—Ed.] It has the power, and we want the members to know that the people expect them to employ it to the very last extremity. The Democrat who holds back is both a traitor and an assassin,—a traitor to his party and an assassin of the liberties of his fellow-men. The men who elected Samuel J. Tilden are ready, willing and able to inaugurate him. Let him but give the signal,—let the people's branch of Congress initiate the contest, and Washington will overflow with a host that will uphold free government or fall in its defense."

The adoption of the Electoral Commission compromise will stand on the Statute books of American legislation as an honor to the nation through all time to come, and posterity will point to it with pride as evidence of the genius of the Anglo Saxon race for self-government.

A great crisis was upon the country, and we seemed to be drifting dead ahead on a rock. Thousands and hundreds of thousands of people honestly believed that Mr. Tilden had been elected President, and hundreds of thousands more were in doubt about it. What was to be done about it? Senator Morton, in the face of his record, said do nothing; let the President proceed with the count. Suppose Senators Edmunds, Conkling, and other Republicans had taken the same position. What then? On the 14th of February, Mr. Ferry, President of the Senate, would have opened the votes and declared the result for Hayes and Wheeler. On the other hand, the Democratic house would have protested against and rejected the votes of Florida and Louisiana, and proceeded at once to the election of Tilden. The whole country would have been thrown into a convulsion of excitement. Europe would have looked on us with the same apprehension and distrust with which we now look on the contending parties and dual governments in South Carolina and Louisiana, and our National credit and commercial interests would undoubtedly have sustained a serious blow. Worse than this, we should possibly have been precipitated into scenes of violence among ourselves. No one can tell what would have happened. The situation was shrouded with uncertainty, and what might have been will always be the subject of curious speculation for philosophic historians.

If Hayes takes the Southern leader's line, and puts Lamar and Ben. Hill in his Cabinet, it will prove a barren victory to our neighbor of the Intelligencer, whose only dread has been that the "blasted rebels" would be restored to power.—Register of yesterday.

The quoted words "blasted rebels" are the Register's—not ours. We certainly are opposed to putting the rebels in power—that is, in absolute control of the Government. We have been, and are now, entirely willing that they shall share in the administration of the Government. And we can say we would be pleased to see Gov. Hayes put two leading Southern men in his Cabinet—not carpet-bag Southern—but reconstructed Southern men, such as Ben. Hill and Lamar claim to be. "We rather like Ben. Hill since the Presidential election, and especially since his triumph over the irreconcilables in the late Senatorial struggle in Georgia.

We look forward with confidence to Gov. Hayes's southern policy. We believe he will give the country reason to be gratified in that respect. The great fear of Mr. Tilden has been that he would keep alive the old issues by encouraging and patronizing the secession element in the South, and thus make the country practically uninhabitable for Republicans. What is wanted is a truly National policy in the south, under which citizens will be as well protected, and as much respected, irrespective of their politics, as they are at the North. This has not been possible up to this time, and it is not entirely possible even now. But an administration that will incorporate into its policy the best men of the old regime in the South, and win to its support a fair proportion of the education and property of that section, will open the way towards wiping out all color—black and all the old pro-slavery prejudices against Republicanism.

Can Temperance be Promoted by Substituting Beer for Spirits. (Extract from an address by Rev. Henry Kinney in Chicago published by review.)

A few years ago an international congress assembled in London. Every civilized nation was invited to send delegates. These delegates were asked to give an opinion concerning the causes of crime in their own nation. From but two or three came the declaration of drunkenness in one of the chief causes. The larger nations who made no allusion to intemperance were wine-drinking France, and wine and beer-drinking Germany. Those Germans who immigrated to England, where there was a climate not very unlike Germany, had become intemperate because they had in a measure changed their liquor from water steeped with barley to distilled liquor. The Germans have, however, given up their former intoxicating habits by clinging to their beer. What is the composition of that beer? Of brewed liquor brown stout is the strongest, and contains 9 per cent of alcohol. Munich beer, the strongest German drink, contains about 5 per cent. In Germany, besides lager beer formed by a slow fermentation, there is a beer made by rapid fermentation for immediate use. American lager is but this latter draught beer weakened, and has in it but little over 3 per cent of alcohol. Statistics of arrests for drunkenness by nationalities are very difficult to obtain. In New York statistics we find a column made up in the desired way. It is a table of convictions in the courts of special sessions for the larger cities in that State. The sum total of arrests for being intoxicated or drunk and disorderly during the years 1871-72-73-74 was 103,175; of these the native Americans, black and white, were 32,568. The Canadians (for the reason of the nearness of their country, almost the same as natives in their habits) one in 72; Germans, one in 44; French, one in 23; English and Scotch, both, one in 28; Irish, one in ten. The Canadian and native white as nations, drink both fermented beer and distilled drinks. French drink wine, Germans beer. Are not statistics on the side of the beer drinker? Last year the number of barrels of beer made in Chicago was 311,451, against 296,858 for 1875.

Do you wonder that I believe that as beer drinking becomes more and more a national beverage, crimes of violence will diminish? Do you wonder that I hope for change in the Canadian trade will contract the habit of beer drinking? All advancement being accompanied with vicarious suffering, do you wonder that I believe that if the Government lays a high tax on spirituous liquors, and a very low tax on malt liquor, it has done all that it can to interfere with the traffic?

CONSUMERS of kerosene oil will be interested in hearing that the great petroleum combination has gone to pieces, so far as Canada is concerned. Forty refineries of the Dominion have been this net and freed from the Canadian market, and the price there will immediately fall at least 15 cents a gallon. It is not probable, therefore, that 40 cents can much longer be extorted from our own people for 20-cent oil, as this import for change in the Canadian trade will contract the habit of beer drinking? All advancement being accompanied with vicarious suffering, do you wonder that I believe that if the Government lays a high tax on spirituous liquors, and a very low tax on malt liquor, it has done all that it can to interfere with the traffic?
