The Question that is Never Set-tied. We observe by the Pittsburgh papers of yesterday that the Presbytery of Pittsburgh had a serious and unsatisfactory ing and inevitable "Amusement" question. But first we should notice that the Presbytery discussed the expediency of publishing the record of the Old Redstone Association from 1781 down to 1839 anusement question, the dilemma being as to what sort of a deliverance should be made on the subject of dancing and card playing. After all that is said about politicians and editors being afraid to tackle the unpopular side of public questions, we were hardly prepared to say, but will probably be able to see so many of the clerical brethren show much shakiness in the matter of standing squarely up to the mark on the amusement question. There is, however, a 'great deal of human nature in the world. It was admitted on all hands, in the debate that took place, that Dancing and Card-playing were very reprehensible practices—in fact, sins, and finally the following resolution was offered and adopted:

The Wheeling Work House Project.

We publish this morning a communication from Mr. Fleming, the Secretary of the Board of Managers of the Allegheny Work House, in regard to the proposed Work House in this county. We have thought worth while to print his letter as containing food for reflection for those whose ideas seem to be very crude and wild on this subject. There are those among us who are quite ready to rush pell-mell into a big debt record the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Hut- for the sake of putting up an institution the pressing need for which has yet to be shown. A Penal School and Work House This said event occurred yesterday It calls for a farm, for good buildings, at Stannton, Virginia, at the residence of and for efficient superintendence and police her son, Rev. Walter Hulliben, with arrangements, and also for educational facilities, all of which, first and last, would put this county into $100,000 of debt. Mr. Fleming estimates its probable expense at $200,000. At least these are 1835, immediately after her marriage, the figures he names as covering his ideas years-having departed this life as far enterprise, that we would spend all of his

The author considers that the influences of civiliza-tion are increasing the longerity of the y many supposed. He cites the evidence of Sir Thomas D. Hardy, who searched of Sir Thomas D. Hardy, who searched the records of the English courts for 400 years, from the thirteenth to the six-teenth centuries, and has found in their namberless notices of age not a single instance of a man who had survived his eightieth year, but, on the other hand, abundant proofs that the age of 70 was regarded as extreme, and was reddom reached. He also quotes the remark of Kolb, the cautious German writer on comparative statistics, who says that "The meagre facts known that the maximum age of man has remained nearly the same for centure of the result of and profitable value. The difference between what could have been real-ence between what could have been real-ence between what could have been real-lead, 45 to 47 cents, and what its now to handsome little income to the people our county. It is no doubt very trying and mortifying to think of accepting the cents are pound after having request the time would be cents, and therefore that figure is no mean price. Indeed, from the outlook at present the prospect is that there will be a still further decline, and there will be a still further decline, and the time may not be far distant that those quotes the remark of Kolb, the cautious derman writer on comparative stalistics, who says that "The meagre facts known indicate that the maximum age of man has remained nearly the same for centu-ries and even thousands of years; but that the number of persons who reach extreme age, and especially the number who sur-vive infancy, has very materially in-creased."

It is quite probable, once we were started in such an enterprise, that we would spend all of his estimate before we could say 'that the project was properly consummated. Read what he easy upon the experience of his Board in the matter of expense. Such institutions are proverbially expensive to put under way.

Our ideas on this subject, as far as we have any, and we are free to confess that we have none as yet satisfactory to ourselves, are that when a Reformatory and Penal institution, such as the one proposed, is to be built, it should be undertaken conjointly by the four counties of the property of the plague, it is to be built, it should be undertaken conjointly by the four counties of that one-tenth of the human race were killed, and as many more disfigured, by this irightful disease. The cholera slew 40,000,000 of people in the half century after the wars of Napoleon. Matthew Paris states that in his time, the thirteenth century, there were 2,000,000 the use of the law of the states that in his time, the thirteenth century, there were 2,000,000 the use of the law of the states that a proper of the law of the states that a proper of the law of the states that a provided the states of the law of the states of the law of the states of the law of the states at tention to sanitary measures in the construction of dwellings, in ventilation, food, clothing, drainage, etc., etc., are constantly tendyet they show the prevalence of a plagace that has disappeared before civilization. A widening knowledge of the laws of hygiene, and increased attention to sanitary measures in the construction of wellings, in ventilation, food, clothing, drainage, etc., etc., are constantly tending to the protection of health and the preservation of life. The intention is that every class of in-come shall pay according to its character, and that no class shall escape the cogni-zance of the revenue officers. In some places in Saxony, for instance, when it is a question of assessing the income of a foreigner or any other person as to whose resources it is a matter of difficulty for the officials to obtain accurate informa-tion, they estimate his income by his out-go, and as they cannot tax what he gets they tax what he spends. Washington, December 5.—Judge Humphreys has delivered his opinion in WASHINGTON, December 5.—Judge Humphreys has delivered his opinion in the habeas corpus case of Senator Patterson. He denies the power of South Carolina to vacate Senator Patterson's commission, which must continue until constitutionally revoked in pursuance of organic authority. It could not be said that Senator Patterson was a fugitive from justice, as he was here in the discharge of official duties, like all other memoers of Congress, and besides he had acted in the capacity of Senator years before the present indictment was brought against him in the South Carolina Court. The Judge conclinded his opinion as follows: I think I am bound to take judicial cognizance that party organization is one thing and a faction to destroy it another. The most cruel tyranny would be the application of civil forms of law to the dominance and triumph of the passions of faction. NEW YORK, December 5 -- Rev. Droeeph Wild, Pastor of the Union Con-Joseph Wild, Pastor of the Union Congregational Church of Brooklyn, in anawer to Rev. Dr. Swing's letter, requesting him to permit his Church to be used for a Conference of congregational churches in this vicinity for social and apiritual communion, to-day called on Dr. Swing and declined to accede to his request. It is supposed that the reason for prompting this refusal was a desire to avoid being drawn into any troubles between the Plymouth and other churches.
