The Ohio City Mill.

The late purchases of the Ohio City Mill, at Martin's Ferry, have pushed their repairs with such vigor that they are now about ready to commence the manufacture of nails. On Wednesday the train of muck rolls was started and everything moved off very nicely, not so smoothly, however, as they will when run a few days. The sheet rolls were also put in motion in the evening and found to be in perfect line. The driving wheel gearing was found to be too tight in consequence of which the mill was stopped Thursday to remedy the fault. The managing force of the new company, to speak theoretically, may be classed as stars, all of them being ex-presidents and ex-managers. We found the President, Alex. Langhlin, ex-President of the Benwood; Mr. Wetherald, the general manager, is the late general manager of the Bellaire Mill; Humphrey Williams, who will have charge of the muck rolls, is an ex-manager from the old Ohio City Iron Co.; Wm. Hastings, who will have charge of the mill plate rolls, is the late manager of the Top Mill; Charley Wilbur, late manager of the Benwood Mill, has taken a furnace, while our portly ex-Chief of Police, E. M. Davis, has charge of the blacksmith department.

The gentlemen whom we have named give a fair representation of the class of men who will be employed under the new regime. The managers have received numerous applications from men who have heretofore been employed in different departments of the mill, asking to be employed at their old jobs. To all these the reply has been that if they are sober men and their work is satisfactory they shall have their old places. The Company has felt emphatically understood that men who patronize saloons instead of spending their earnings for the benefit of their families can neither have nor retain any job in their mill. This resolution will of itself work a wholesome revolution in the morale of Martin's Ferry workmen, and will be even more effective in breaking up the saloon business than the most rigid prohibitory enactments that can be enforced by the municipal authorities. It will insure to the mill company the best class of workmen and to the town the best class of citizens. Already the town is experiencing great benefits from the revival of its manufacturing interests. Every house in the town and in Clark's addition is occupied, and there is a demand for more. The good people feel cheerful over their prospects, and the cloud of gloom which has so long hung like a pall over their material interests is being rapidly dissipated.

It is announced in the Washington, Pa., papers that the Hansen family have left the west end of that county for parts unknown. Reports say they have gone to Missouri. John and Joe Hansen have been notorious sheep traders in Washington county for years, and in the course of their dealings have gained a very unenviable reputation—so much so that one of them is an outlaw from justice for alleged complicity in a most rascally scheme to bankrupt a man named Perry McCoy, living near Dutch Fork, by inducing him, in collusion with a man named Bartleson, to sign a judgment note under false pretenses, by which he lost his farm. The crookedness of the Hansens as traders has long been known, and that last transaction seems to have set the seal of popular opprobrium on them so completely that they have thought it advisable to emigrate. It is said that they are responsible for having imposed a great many diseased sheep on the farmers of Marshall county in this State, and it is also said that they sold a great many such sheep to the farmers of the Valley of Virginia. They affected to be quite religious, and although hauled over the coals several times by the church to which they belonged, made constant efforts to reinstate themselves. It is generally thought that Washington county is well rid of them.

Some of our West Virginia exchanges have been scoring the railroad hotel at Gratton for alleged extortionate charges. The Parkersburg Journal says that it has "no fault to find with its table or rooms; but its charges seem to be regulated upon the idea that its proprietor has a prior right to what loose change there is circulating in West Virginia." The only remedy for our editorial brethren is to follow the current fashion of the public now—a days, viz: carry their lunches with them when they ride on the rail. This growing practice will soon regulate prices at the eating houses and hotels along railroads. Hundreds of people who would patronize these places at reasonable prices now ignore them altogether, feeling that they can provide themselves before leaving home with as good a meal for a mere trifle of the money. Nearly every article of food has come down in price within the last year and yet charges at railroad hotels are as high as ever.

The Fairmont Virginian is not satisfied with the $25,000 in the Congressional appropriation bill for the Upper Monongahela, and says that it will not keep in repair the locks and dams that have already been built. It contrasts the insignificance of the sum with the aggregate appropriations for the Third district rivers, and asks if Col. Ben. Martin, the 2d district member, was asleep.

Here is a chance for some nice elderly gentleman, "over 54 years of age," to make an investment. We find it in the "personal" column of the Chicago Times: A respectable, Christian, unencumbered widow, with means, desires to correspond with a truly honorable gentleman, over 54 years of age, with means. View mutual interest. The pure and just, preliminary stating age and circumstances, may address, for four days, Widow, Times office.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 6. Special Correspondence of the Intelligencer.

If it had not been for the Hon. Montgomery Blair this week would probably have passed without any great political sensation. Judge Blair's days for doing actual mischief in a public way have passed; in these times he makes harmless theatrical displays which serve to vary the monotony. To take a slight liberty with Artemus Ward's phrase, it may now be said—and said exhaustively of Montgomery Blair—that "he is an amusing old cuss." Nothing more. He plays his role with the greater ability because in earnest, that is to say, he wants to win, though he has no principle staked on his success. Montgomery is not above a little deception. He has deceived himself into the belief that he is a great man, endowed by High Heaven with certain talents which, with a due regard to a well-timed and a future rewards and punishment, he may not tie up in a napkin. Just at this time he feels called on to unsettle the country, if possible, with the threat of a gigantic political upheaval which shall lay Rutherford B. Hayes out of sight and place Samuel J. Tilden in the White House. Montgomery flatters himself that this is the great end for which he was created, from which it will be seen that the dissent from the popularly accepted theory that his creation, so far from being a matter of design, was an unexpected freak of nature for which he countenances refused to atone by shrinking from the public notice. Montgomery would be the last man in America to shrink. He believes in his individual righteousness, and, therefore, "is bold as a lion." He has also, to some extent, deceived the State of Maryland. He is a citizen of Washington, to all intents. To avoid the sweep of the scorching sun he spends part of the summer of the country seat which he has bought a few miles out of Washington, in Maryland. His business and most of his interests are in Washington. Under cover of his country seat he deceived the State of Maryland into the belief that he is one of her citizens and so he worked himself into her Legislature. He might have done no more harm than any other member of the Maryland Legislature if he had not thought it his mission to purify American politics. He may not accomplish all he has marked out for himself, but he has contrived to make Maryland $10,000,000 poorer, if the Attorney General of that State be disposed to carry out the programme. When the resolution was passed it was understood that any action in the name of the State must depend on and be supplementary to action by Congress in the nature of preliminary proceedings. Careful reading of the resolution reveals the fact that it was so drawn as to allow the Attorney General of Maryland to go ahead without reference to Congress, spend the State's money and accomplish nothing. As the last resolution would have failed if, in addition to Judge Blair's convincing arguments against the "Great Presidential Fraud" the great heart of the Maryland Legislature had not been fired with a wise spark. That other man in Annapolis was rare and unobtainable. Nobody in that ancient city attached any importance to the resolution; as a member of the Legislature remarked to your correspondent yesterday: "We put it through just to please old Gen.," with which exception the "old Gen." there isn't a man in Washington willing to confess that he has any idea that there will be any serious effort to oust Hayes. "Every body knows he is a fraud" said a western Democrat "but Hewitt is about right—his title is infelicitous, but Blair is making strong efforts to set his ball in motion in the House, but thus far every man to whom he has applied, has asked to be excused, a Maryland member said, "he couldn't afford it."

A BACK CAP FOR THE DEMOCRATS. The Doorkeeper of the House has been made to walk the plank; it is a great pity that he had not a score or two of Democratic members to keep him company. Polk broke the law and his expulsion was only tardy justice; if he had been let alone by his party he would probably have been no worse and no better than the average Doorkeeper. It was absolutely impudently for his party to provide places for all the hungry mendicants of his party without breaking the law, and yet that is just what he was forced to do. Of course a man of back bone and strict integrity would have obeyed the law first—his party afterwards. Some of the members of the House, however, the Doorkeeper's place for three many years. It was noticeable that Polk's warmest support came from the South; this was only fair gratitude, for Polk did his little all to build up "the prostrate industries" of that section. This he did under the aegis of his own party, and it can readily be imagined how it stretched his patriotic heart strings to put ex-Congressmen on the rolls which, by law, was for the exclusive benefit of disabled soldiers of the Union. This was noticed, but no fully reported for his party. The story of Major Frye, instead of being moved to admiration, was roused to a pitch of indignation which found vent in one of the most stirring speeches of the session. He thought the Democracy had wronged the wounded veterans of the Union, and they thought he put into such shape as to make of them a very formidable campaign document, the more promising of destruction because it is so finely flavored with truth. Mr. Frye's speech is so well thought of by Republicans that they have ordered one hundred and fifty thousand copies of it in the wicked hope that it will turn some districts, now Democratic, in which there is a large Union soldier element, TARIFF BILL PROSPECT. The Polk trouble ebbed Mr. Wood's tariff bill out of the way, though it had been made the special order for April 4. It is not likely that he will call it up before next Tuesday, in the meantime men are hurrying here from every section to save what they can from the wreck which Mr. Wood threatens. The merchants of his own city have forwarded a protest which Mr. Wood would heed if he were not so thoroughly infatuated with the beauty of his thoughts. He is looking carefully over his revised bill, it is discovered that Mr. Wood has allowed himself to be betrayed into a glaring inconsistency. There was one thing which he did not intend to do—he would have no free list, nothing should be enumerated as free. Now, he declares in his bill that bolting-cloths and shucks for tobacco boxes shall be free. Bolting cloths are not made in this country and ought to be free. Shucks for tobacco boxes are produced here with a facility that would surprise Mr. Wood and may lose him some votes; this item, besides being an inconsistency, is another instance wherein Mr. Wood has played into foreign hands. A leading member of the House predicts that the bill will be defeated in that body by a two-thirds majority. My own conviction of the House is that the bill more strength than this. The indications are that the bill will be defeated, but this will be the result of hard work and not because the majority of the House would hesitate, if let alone, to pass Mr. Wood's bill. It must always be borne in mind that the tariff is the one question on which members of Congress have the least intelligent information. To successfully oppose a tariff bill set up with a majority at its back means that the measure shall be taken in hand singly and patiently, labored with until they yield to the pressure of conviction. It is a discouraging fact that the most important members are the least open to conviction; they dance to the music of the party and draw the material from which the bill will draw its chief support.

Malliers' Consumption.

A correspondent writes that nothing is so common among malliers of late years as what is known as malliers' consumption. The rate of mortality from diseases of the lungs, superinduced by the dust from the grindstones, is positively fearful. A post-mortem examination held on the body of G. W. Johnson, of Wheeling, who died a short time ago, which was published in the daily papers, furnished a full description of this so-called "malliers' consumption." An attempt has been made in some of the mill manufactories to prevent dust from circulating by introducing powerful fans, with a series of pipes by which the dust is carried off through the fans by exhaustion. Now, this is all well and good, but the fans do not do enough so far as it goes, but the fans do not, nor is it possible for any known mechanical appliances to remove all the dust; hence sufficient dust remains floating in the atmosphere to kill in a short time persons whose respiratory organs are not of the most healthy and durable character. Most particularly is this the case with malliers. Devices, such as a moist sponge worn over the nose and mouth, fail to prevent the complaint. The correspondent recommends a false moustache so constructed that it will fit neatly around the outer rim of the nose, and ending in a hook below the chin those who have no beard, or correspondingly to those who have. A light gum elastic string would hold it on without disagreeable feeling. Any hair not too coarse would answer the purpose. Such an appliance would not disfigure the face, when worn, could be easily adjusted, and would save many a poor fellow from an untimely grave. If any one will take the trouble to look at a hair under a microscope, he will see how nature has constructed it for this purpose. A feather is a very good illustration of a hair, with its thousands of barbules all pointing in the same way, catching and holding all floating particles that are drawn toward the nostrils by inhalation.—E.

The Most Precious Gifts.

Health is undeniably a more precious gift than riches, honor or power. Who would exchange it for these, the chief objects of human ambition? It is obviously the part of wisdom to employ means for the preservation of health and the prolongation of life which time and experience have proved to be reliable. Many of the dangers by which health is threatened may be nullified by the use of that most irresistible of correctives and tonics, Hostetter's Stomach Bitter, which, by increasing vital power and rendering the physical functions regular and active, keeps the system in good working order and protects it against disease. For constipation, dyspepsia, liver complaint, nervousness, kidney and rheumatic ailments, it is invaluable, and it affords a sure defence against malarial fevers, besides removing every trace of such disease from the system. Half a wine-glassful taken before meals improves the appetite and insures complete digestion and assimilation. cod-w
