WEST VIRGINIA CONVENTIONS. First District—Martinsburg, April 22.

The Result in New York. The New York Tribune, commenting on the result at Ulster, says that Blaine was stronger than anybody else and just fell short of being stronger than everybody else.

Another interesting feature of the result is that the delegate-at-large are Edmunds men, representing a small element of the convention, and as tried by the sentiment of the districts, the first choice of a small portion of the Republican party in New York.

It is claimed by some of the friends of President Arthur that the Edmunds men are really Arthur men in disguise.

The same has been said of some of the Blaine delegates in Pennsylvania.

It is one of the curious phases of politics that there are politicians willing to boast of having deceived the people by a scheme to misrepresent them.

With the President's slender backing in his own State his chance for nomination is gone.

A South-nearly solid will not compensate for what he ought to have and cannot command at home.

The National Convention will remember that the prospect of electoral votes from the South is not great, and that it is not long since the President's candidate for Governor of New York was defeated by 192,000 majority.

IRELAND'S POPULATION IN 1881. Ireland's population is now 5,100,000—3,000,000 less than in 1841.

The yearly cost of the French Academy to the State amounts to $9,000 France.

Gardening is practically tight in more than 20,000 primary schools in France.

One firm at New Haven ships a thousand barrels of oysters a week to Liverpool.

London now receives flowers from Italy as fresh as if they had been picked but an hour.

The convict mortality in Alabama's State prison is larger than that of any other, except Mississippi.

A lace factory is about to be started in the kind in this country, and will give employment to over 200 persons.

The residents of Albia and Ida Hill, N. Y., have the benefit of a unique sensation in the fact that a book agent, a victim of unrequited love, attempted suicide.

The editor of the Nashville World wrote that "all the windows in a certain district village looked as if they needed washing."

The printer set it up "all the windows" and the World had some trouble in making satisfactory explanations.

If Senator Harrison, of Indiana, is unable to attend the Republican National Convention his place will be filled by Mr. E. F. Horn, who was selected as first alternate by the Indiana State Convention.

Mr. Horn is the editor of the colored organ in Indianapolis.

As a result of his extensive experience in building compressed-air locomotives for European travel, Colonel Beaumont states that one cubic foot of air under a pressure of 1,000 pounds will convey a load of three tons a distance of one mile on any of the colliery tracks.

People may now go faster from one distant point to another over the water than over the land.

The New York Sun says: "There were a straight line of water from New York to San Francisco, there is no train on the present schedule between the two points which the Oregon would not leave behind her."

Charles Goodnight is a king among cattlemen in Texas, and has fenced in 700,000 acres with 250 miles of wire fence at the head of Red River, in the Pan Handle.

His ranch consists of nearly 25,000 acres more than there in the entire State of Rhode Island, and he bought the whole lot from fifty cents to one dollar an acre.

Some timely protests are made in the Republican press against the old practice of giving the Vice Presidency to the defeated faction in the National Conventions.

The San Francisco Bulletin says that the custom has gone far enough, and that a friend and co-worker of the man who heads the ticket should be given second place.

O'CONNELL'S DUEL. An Account by the Orator's Second—How It Came About.

The best account of the famous duel in which the celebrated Irish orator and lawyer shot his antagonist dead, is contained in the work on "Curran and his Contemporaries" by Charles Phillips, who was the second of O'Connell in the duel referred to, and who was himself a celebrated lawyer and orator.

He died a year or two ago.

Living, as he did, in constant turmoil, and caries, as he was, to whom he gave offence, O'Connell of course had a multitude of enemies.

Of this, himself the cause, he had no right to complain; but he had a right to complain of the calumnies they circulated.

These were a charge of want of courage in Ireland a rare and very detrimental accusation. O'Connell, during his latter years, declined duelling, and publicly avowed his determination.

The reason given, and given in the House of Commons, was that having "blood upon his hands" he had registered a vow in heaven.

To this there could have been no possible objection had he included in the registry a vow not to offend any man, simple or noble, who made himself amenable to his perseverance at once in insult and irreconcilability.

The truth is, O'Connell's want of courage consisted in his fighting the duel in which the vow originated.

The facts of the case are few and simple. In one of his many bold speeches he called the corporation of Dublin a "beggarly corporation."

A gentleman named D'Este was affected to feel this as a personal affront, he being one of the very numerous body, and accordingly fastened a quarrel on the offender.

It is quite true that O'Connell endeavored to avoid the encounter. He did not do enough. He should have summoned D'Este before the tribunals of the country, after failing to appease him by a repeated declaration that he meant no personal offence, and could not, he being a total stranger to him. However, in an evil hour, he continued to utter a savage and un-Christian insult—unfortunate D'Este paid for his perverseness with his life, and the still more unfortunate O'Connell expiated his moral turpitude with much mental anguish to the day of his death.

The version of the duel appears to me no proof whatever of personal courage; the refusal, in the then state of society, would have shown much more.

However, on the occasion in question he showed a total absence of what is vulgarly called "nerve," his first letter of challenge was remarkable. Let us who read the following anecdote remember that he most reluctantly engaged in the combat; that he was then the father of seven children; and that it was an alternative of life or death with him.

D'Este being reputed an unerring marksman. Being one of those who accompanied O'Connell, he beckoned me aside to a distant portion of the very large field, which had a slight covering of snow.

"Philips," said he, "this seems to me not a pleasant, but a perilous affair. I am obnoxious to a party, and they adopt a false pretence to cut me off. I shall not submit to it. They have reckoned without their host, I promise you, and one of the best shots in Ireland at a mark, having, as a public man, considered it a duty to prepare, for my own protection, against such unprovoked aggression as the present. Now, remember what I say to you. I may be struck myself, and then you are out of the question. I am not an antagonist may have caused to regret his having forced me into this conflict. The parties were then very soon placed on the ground, at I think, twelve paces distance, each having a case of pistols, with directions to fire when they closed within a given signal. D'Este rather signified himself by making a short speech, disclaiming all hostility to his Roman Catholic countrymen, and took his ground, somewhat theatrically crossing his pistols upon his hips.

Instantly on the signal, D'Este fell mortally wounded. There was the first self-possession displayed by both. It seemed to me a duty to narrate these details in O'Connell's lifetime whenever I heard his courage questioned, and I refer to his memory now promptly to record them here.

A HOMELESS BODY. Remarkable Discovery of a Boonville Man in the Kentucky Mountains.

News from Lexington, Ky., Cor. Cincinnati Times-Star. Your correspondent was introduced to Isaac Arbuckle, a member of a United States Marshal's posse, the other day, who have just returned from a raid in search of moonshine whiskey manufacturers in the mountains of Eastern Kentucky.

Arbuckle was waiting for a train to take to his home in Carter county, and when interrogated stated that the revenue raid was almost barren of results, but that he had made a discovery while prowling through the mountains down below Barbourville that he felt sure would be of interest to newspaper readers.

His story, in his own words, was as follows: "Two days after leaving Barbourville I spent the night at the home of a farmer on the hills, and during a social family conversation, in which I participated, after supper, some one incidentally spoke of Hector Davis, 'the man without a name.' I immediately asked what was meant by the expression, when my host explained that Hector Davis was one of their 'neighbors,' living some three miles further on among the mountains, and that he actually had not a bone in his body.

As I expressed some skepticism, he volunteered to show me over to his neighbor's next morning. We knocked at the door of the Davis cabin about 9 o'clock next day, and the first thing that struck my attention upon entering was a middle-aged man sitting bolt upright and snoring by a rude and peculiarly shaped frame work.

He was introduced to me as Hector Davis. I at once entered into conversation with him, and discovered him to be a man of fair intelligence, and eager to tell all about himself, as he was as strong as any man I had ever met.

I grasped his hand upon entering, but his fingers all rolled up together like a cabbage leaf in a mushy sort of way that made me glad to let go of them.

"Taking hold of his limbs they yielded to the pressure until they were flattened out to twice their proper width. The only indication of bone was in his skull, which, while pliable almost as shoe-leather, still offered a kind of protection to the poor fellow's brain.

His neck was as limber as a dish cloth, and when his head was released from its support, which was something in the shape of a similar contrivance used in photograph galleries, it rolled helplessly about upon his shoulders like a football. His arms drooped at his side, but with the aid of the muscle he was enabled to partly raise the forearm, although the hand curled over limply and gave the whole a sort of zigzag appearance. He shuffled off his slipper, and requested me to step his foot on it. I did so, and at once spread itself out until it looked as if a railroad train had passed over it. It slowly resumed its natural shape, but it was fully a half hour before he was able to get the foot in his slipper again.

"Perhaps you would like to tie my leg in a knot?" he suggested.

I found no difficulty in performing this feat, while my friend accomplished the same with the other leg, and after we had done with both limbs he presented me with a very knotty problem, which would have set a professional contortionist crazy.

When we had unraveled all the knots and straightened his limbs again, he requested me to stand by his frame work and place him upon the floor. This we found no easy task, for his body slipped around in our arms like an eel, and it was only by securing a firm grip upon his limbs that we managed to keep him from falling. We finally succeeded in straightening him out upon the floor, and then my friend, who seemed to thoroughly understand the boneless man's program, seized a barrel standing near, and when I afterwards learned that it contained turnips, and swiftly unpeeled, at once proceeded to roll it over his prostrate Davis, from his toes up to his chin, and back again to his toes.

The only manifestation of pain he made was when the barrel passed over his heart and lungs, but it left him in a lurching shape. I can only describe it by comparing it to that of a man made of mud and then thrown up and flattened against a wall. He had no time to contemplate his flatness, as he immediately called to me in a rather weak voice to "roll him up." This we proceeded to do by doubling his head over his chest and then continuing to "roll him up" as you would find him in a barrel.

He was now in a position to be rolled, and a perfect cylinder about as large as a half-barrel. A voice loudly piped from the center of the cylinder for us to unroll him, and we soon had him once more spread out over the floor.

While his body was resting in its former shape I learned from his old, spectral mother, who had sat during all these proceedings knitting in her rocking chair, that Hector, who was forty years old, had provided for her until the beginning of this peculiar affliction two years ago. He first observed a softening of the bones of the toes and this rapidly spread to all parts of his anatomy, although, beyond making him lame, he never experienced any inconvenience from it. All his vital organs performed their functions properly, and she believed he would live to a good old age. She had a younger son, then in the army, who assisted her in handling him, and although they got along quite comfortably, she did not know what the doctors might think of Hector, as she had not seen a doctor up in them their hills for nearly twenty years. After my friend and I had replaced the boneless man in his framework, we bade him good bye and came away.

RELIGION OF THE WORLD. Comparative Strength of the Sects—A Comprehensive Compilation. Philadelphia American.

The religious census of America, as calculated by Mr. H. K. Carroll, of the Independent, shows a degree of strength in the American churches which is surprising even to their friends.

The various denominations, according to the reports, stood as follows:

Table with 3 columns: Denomination, Ministers, Communicants. Includes Roman Catholics, Methodists, Presbyterians, etc.

It must be noted that the Roman Catholics do not report the number of communicants. The same is true, though for a different reason, of the Friends and the Wesleyans, who have no sacraments.

Deducting these three denominations, we have a communicant membership of 10,328,221 in all the Protestant churches, each of these standing for three or four persons affiliated with the churches, but not communicants.

Mr. Carroll estimates the non-Christian element (Jews, Mormons, Free Thinkers, etc.) at about a million, which we think below the mark.

The theological complexion of Europe is very dissimilar. A high Austrian authority classifies the denominations as follows:

Table with 2 columns: Denomination, Population. Includes Roman Catholics, Greek Church, etc.

Total: 328,574,000

For the whole world we have the estimates of G. F. Kelb, an eminent German statistician. He estimates:

Table with 2 columns: Religion, Total. Includes Christians, Roman Catholics, etc.

"Oh, I do feel so nice!" said a young girl of nineteen years. "I don't feel as if I had a head or a stomach, or anything." And yet headaches, backache, stomach aches, and many other aches, swellings, sores, etc., troubled her before she took Dr. Guyot's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla.

This remedy helped her to perfect health, and was prescribed by her clear complexion, smooth skin and bright eyes. It will relieve all ailments peculiar to female life.
