THE WHISPERING GALLERY.

There lies before me at this moment a letter to which I have just devoted half an hour of valuable time. I am now almost sure that I know what the writer desires to say to me; but the signature—that is past finding out. Nothing in the letter suggests the writer. He asks a reply—to whom shall the reply be addressed? He professes a regard for me—to whom shall my kindly feelings go out in response? Having seen this signature once no one could forget it, and having once connected the signature with personal identity, there would be no more trouble. Alas! How thoughtless men are!

*

Recently Bismarck, the Iron Prince, has put his heavy hand on those functionaries in the German service who write illegibly and sign their names so that they cannot be read. Having attained a full power in the Empire this great man now addresses himself to so great a reform. He will have communications written to be read, and, by Gambrinus! he will know who it is that consumes this government ink and paper. It may be said that German names carelessly written are harder to decipher than English names—that Hohenspitzenhuylenzollerbutch in the hands of a rapid and slovenly writer would give more trouble than plain Brown in its worst mood is capable of causing. Be this as it may, if Brown is a really talented sloven he can write himself down in such a way that you will wonder whether he is Braun, Broom, Brann, Brumm or, for that matter, Smith. Because the great men of the earth have so rarely been good penmen the idea has taken root in some otherwise empty heads that bad chirography is the patent of genius. The signature is the triumph of the mightiest endeavors, beginning with the penniless school boy who aims at something that will baffle the forger, and later taking hold of the workman who desires to put strength of character into his sign manual.

*

All this is well enough, if only we be permitted to know what is the story that the pen is supposed to tell. Persons who refuse or are unable to write legibly ought to use a type-writer. A bad signature is mastered by printing the name neatly in a corner at the head of the page. If the end of a writing is to be read, then all writing should be readable. Much illegible writing is the result of haste; that is to say, you save your valuable time at my expense. You dash off gaily a dozen such letters while the passive, helpless party of the second part is stumbling and fumbling over one of them. Shall we not all reform together? What a world we could make this if we would!

*

I attended a number of the sessions of the special joint Council committee appointed to investigate the false, diabolical, malignant charges preferred by Porter Smith, the incompetent head of our police force, against Mayor Grubb, and like hundreds of other citizens, I was pleased and gratified with the manner in which those cowardly charges—gotten up by the Galligan denasty, which has ruled and directed our city affairs about long enough—were refuted by the very witnesses put on by Smith to prove their truth. During the time that evidence was being taken in relation to the issuing of permits by the Mayor to poor persons to peddle, I was reminded of a remark I once heard made by old Dr. McCosh, President of Princeton College, in the course of a speech made at an Alumni dinner given in Pittsburgh several years ago. He said: "God has given us two eyes to see with, and he has also given us two eyelids with which to close them." No one doubts but that Mayor Grubb has eyes bright enough to see that our ordinances are properly enforced—Porter Smith and the gamblers realized that to their cost—but he also has a proper and reasonable discretion which he exercises, and in a time when the poor are in distress and must either steal or starve unless assisted, he gives a little permit to peddle in order that indigent persons may keep the wolf from the door. He violates no ordinance in doing this; he exercises his discretion as other Mayors have done, as Colonel Sweeney put it in his testimony, and for this, he is falsely charged. Shame on the crowd that got up those charges. They cannot boast of anything approaching discretion else they would never have put themselves in the box they have.

*

In connection with this investigation I heard of a good story told about Col. Bob White, one of Smith's counsel—"old billy-goat" as the boys have gotten to call him since Mr. Hubbard's reference to one of the Colonel's vagaries in his speech before the committee. A well known Democratic citizen, the father of a family of grown children, who has no use for a man who, like Col. White, would go into a case as Col. White did into Porter Smith's case, had during the investigation a friend from out of town visiting at his house. At breakfast table the investigation was the main topic of conversation and Col. White was getting a turning over for his share in the affair. The guest asked: "What kind of a cross-examiner is this Col. White, anyway?" "Well, I'll show you," answered the host; turning to his oldest son he said, "Now, Frank, you be the witness and I'll be Col. White. You are to answer my questions." "All right, sir!" "Well, sir, I understand you to say that you air settin' in that cheer?" "Yes, sir." "You are willin' to swear that you air settin' in that cheer?" "Yes, sir!" "When you say that you air settin'——" A daughter interrupting, "Sitting, father, not 'settin','" Son, who is acting as witness: "Yes, sir, I am sitting on this chair." Father, alias Col. White, "Oh, you are sitting on that chair, are you? Now perhaps you will be kind enough to explain what you meant a moment ago by saying that you were settin' on that chair. What do you mean sir? How do you propose to reconcile your two statements?" Those who saw and heard Col. White laughed and applauded heartily, and the stranger caught on.

*

I heard another story in connection with the investigation. A lawyer spoke in this fashion: "By Jove, the only mistake Bill Hubbard made in the whole business was, that he didn't wear a dress suit when he made his speech. Now there was White in his Sunday clothes including his eye glass on a string, which he swung as he talked, now hitting himself on the ear and then in the face, and on his face the most solemn look he had in the shop. Then there was Arnett, freshly shaved, hair plastered down and boots blacked. You could have told from their appearance that each was down for a speech. And then there was Hubbard—he wore the same old conglomerate colored tie, his hair was mussed and his boots muddy. 'Twas very funny—ah, yes, a little liquor please—[pause] Yes sir, that was the only mistake Hubbard made, but egad his speech was a rattler!"

*

It was said last season that the roller skating craze was such that this season would see it entirely dead. Those that said so were never more mistaken. I actually believe the craze is greater this season than it was last, and it is plainly evident that manufacturers think so, for contracts have been given out for 10,000 tons of steel, to be used in the manufacture of skates. Within nine months over 150 patents have been taken out for skate improvements, and foreign agents are scouring the world for boxwood, to be used for the wheels, this wood having become so scare as to double in price.

Has Anybody Told You—

That the display made here this season of fall and winter goods is large and wonderfully handsome?

That the head of the household does not look with favor on this display?

That the women folks do, and yearn to possess portions of it?

That stormy scenes sometimes occur in the effort to get the old man to pony up?

That he usually has to come to it?

That he may as well look pleasant when he does finally have to put up the dust?

That Christmas is not so awfully far away?

That neither are January bills?

That one begets the other?

That a man who wears a straw hat now is to be regared with suspicion?

That a newspaper is like a toothbrush?

That every one should use his own and not borrow his neighbors?

That the National colors are not in demand in the Bourbon parades in Virginia?

That these same Bourbons must have forgotten a dear lesson?

That we have turned the rascals out in Ohio?

That we shall do the same in the old Empire State?

That pretty teeth make pretty people?

That revolvers are safest out of sight?

That journalism was the only profession not represented in last year's suicidal statistics? THE WHISPERER.

BREAKFAST BUDGET.

The honey crop of Maine is worth $40,000, and is produced by 12,000 colonies of bees.

Veterinary surgeons think that the overdraw check rein, by reason of muscular strain upon the eyes, produces blindness in horses.

The blue jay is now credited with eating the maple worm and even the English sparrow is commended by the Industrialist for gorging himself with seventeen-year locusts.

The London Garden reports the double marsh marigold (caltha palustris) as giving a second bloom in Autumn. One may observe the same peculiarity in this plant here. The rich yellow flowers above the dark broad leaves make it an admirable plant for lake borders.

The three Emperors were together at Kremsier twenty hours only, but the entertainment while there cost the Australian Court Treasury some $300,000, or $250 a minute. There were 800 persons at two meals and among the wines were 1,000 bottles of Rhine cabinet, 3,000 bottles of champagne and 2,500 of claret.

"Cattle have increased more than threefold in the United States during the past ten years," says the Shoe and Leather Reporter, which adds: "Ours is the greatest cattle producing region on the globe. On farms there are now about 42,000,000; on ranch and range property West of the Mississippi about 10,000,000 cattle greze."

Righteous wrath illumined the face of the Rev. E. T. Tonge, of Exeter, England, the other day when at the wedding of Miss Bessie Brown he stood up in the pulpit, assumed a dignified attitude, and solemnly rebuked that part of the congregation that had come there "only to see what could be produced by the manufactory of art and the dressmaker's skill."

"Though his hair is white," says London Truth, giving a pen picture of Rochefort, "his vitality is unimpaired. Rochefort has a vast head, and the widest and deepest chest of any Frenchman that I know. The bulk of his frame diminishes (in appearance) his stature. The nerves are as excitable as the muscles are strong, and he vibrates as readily as an Æolian harp."

A SENSIBLE woman will not fail to keep a bottle of Salvation Oil on hand for men's cuts and bruises.
