What the Bogus Dollar Does. Last week's shipments of gold to England are a recognition of the silver danger and the indication that shrewd capitalists have little hope that Congress will mend this is occurring we may be sure that more gold is being deposited in the stockings savings banks and other household depositories. The people have so soon reached the conclusion that Congress will do nothing about silver, that hope already borrows disappointment from the session, and gold is leaving to the inferior dollar the field which they cannot both occupy on even terms.

Of the Congressmen who oppose suspension of the rilver dollar coinage, some have already declared through the public prints that the cilver dollar is the poor man's dollar, and that the effort to stop piling up that dollar is part of the relentless warfare which the rich wage upon the poor. Half a century sgo Daniel Webster said that the very man of all others who has the deepest interest in a good curreney, who suffers most by a depreciated cur rency and sudden changes of prices, is the man who carns his daily bread by his daily toil. And Mr. Webster denounced as the enemy to his whole country, to be marked especially as "the poor man's curse," whoever sought to aray one class against another on the question of a sound whatever, we sim to go back and catch up with all that is classic in all languages, to be familiar with all that is of later origin, and to keep up with the enormous growth of a publishers' reservoir fed by affluents of every tongue. We expect of each other that what is old and what is new in art, science, politics, religion and literature shall be over on tap, to be served in approved style when ordered.

To get the best out of reading there ought to be a good system honestly pursned, which will be no less a pleasure be cause it is also a profit. But if one aime to keep up with everything that is published on every topic and in every department of literature, he must understand that he can have no thorough acquaintance with anything, and is not likely to find increasing comfort in the companionship of his books. Read-think,-other wise reading is almost in vain, for nothing remains but scattered particles having no relation to each other and rarely at com mand even when very little would be a

A Weakness for Diamonds. Tabor, who paid an enormous sum of money for a seat in the United States Senate for thirty days, that he might be marked for life with the brand of an ex-Senator, has abandoned his intellecutial struggle with $250 night shirts, and is devoting his talents to the adorment of his person with diamonds.

Tabor does not go it quite so strong as the late Mrs. Mary Jane Morgan, who had half a million in diamonds and sometimes were a hundred thousand dollars worth Tabor wears thirty thousand dollars worth of diamonds, in his shirt front, in his cuffs in his collar, on his fingers, wherever a dismond can be placed to public advantage Before he retires he unharnesses himself and hands over his precious jewels to be kep at the risk of the hotel; and before he can see company in the morning he has to send for his dismonds and put himself together. A newspaper recently told of a woman who had her teeth filled with diamonds, gold being too common for her. Tabor has his head filled with diamonds. Men of the Tabor kind bave their use stimulate the diamond production; the set an awful example; they show what fools some mortals be; they entertain, like the trick mule in the circus. They have other uses, but the world is slow to

They Might Do Worse.

Those who want a reliable, wide-awake ity paper could not do better than subcity paper could not do bette scribe for the Intelligences.

It Has For a Fact.

The INTELLIGENCES is one of the best papers in the State and probably has a larger circulation than any other paper published in West Virginia,

The War Comes Up to the Manifesto.

The Wheeling INTELLIGENCER is the best paper, without doubt, printed in this region of country. We endorse every word in its proclamation.

matters. The New York Tribine says that early last year, when trouble was feared from the superfluous eliver dollar, "many bought sterling exchange, or sent gold abroad, and among them were some of the most eagacious Democratic capitalists," one of those capitalists being no lees a person than Mr. Tilden, who sent over and afterwards brought back a round million.

It is significant that the first effect of the new Congress on the finance is to the new Congress on the finance is to the very congress on the finance is to the large gold out of the country, and while this is occurring we may be sure that more ocrats for the same reason that sinners should attend church, viz: that they may be converted from the evil of their ways

THE AGE BOYCOTT.

A Defiant Protest and Declaration of Inde pendence from a Texan.

The following was printed in the Hous ton, Texas, Age: Houston, Tex , Dec. 1, 1885.

William D. Cleveland.

William D. Cleveland.
Your attention is called to the boycott now being carried on by the Knights of Labor of this city against the Evening Age.
An advertisement of your business appears in that paper. You are most respectfully requested to discontinue said advertisement. If it is not discontinued before Friday, December 4, 1885, we will understand that you do not care for the patronsge of organized labor.

Very respectfully,
Committee on Boycort.
Mr. Cleveland replies as follows in the

Mr. Cleveland replies as follows in the

teforring to the above, I beg to say that while I have always been a friend of those members of the Knights of Labor who are real workingmen, and they have my sincere sympathy in any legitimate and well directed effort, individual or organized, to better their condition, I am not quite prepared to admit their right, or that of anyone else, to manage my own business, and therefore I shall advertise in the Age or any other paper as long as against another on the question of a sound and stable currency.

The wage-earner may be sure that the further spart gold and silver go the more certainty there is that he will be paid for his toil in the inferior medium.

A Waste of Good Things.

Mr. James Russell Lowell, in his address at the opening of the new Chelsea Public Library, said that the men of three centurities ago, whose scholarship we are apt to wonder at, were blest with fewer books than we, and what they read was like best. "They lunched with Plutareh and supped with Pisto"—and, we may suppose, though Mr. Lowell does not offer himself as authority, were not flayed or hanged if they happened not to have read Mr. Henry James's latest novel so closely as to be able to analyze his most complex characters.

The too-muchness of our reading is one of the evil things of our time. Starting in the world with no "book learning" whatever, we sain to go back and catch up, with all that is classic in all languages, to

A WAR INCIDENT. How Mark Twain Faced Grant in the Awful Days of Blood Spilling. The New York Sun calls attention t the curious fact that Mark Twain's article in the December Century, entitled, "The Private History of a Campaign that Failed," is, by an odd coincidence, a contemporaneous supplement to chapter 18 approved style when ordered.

We have got as far as possible away from the idea of a few good books well read. The man of one book, always to be feared, is rarely found in these days, unleast be some monument of antiquity who finds the Bible good enough for him, who finds the Bible good enough for him, and has never troubled himself to read so much as one book proving his Book untrue. Those of us whe read books at all read so much that we have little time to assimilate and digest.

Southey had been giving "a certain literary Quaker lady" an idea of his daily routine of labor—how he rose at five, from six to eight read Spanish, then French for an hour; two hours to poetry; two hours to writing prose; and more of the southern that he then and the follow-soldiers were equally frightened appears in the first frank confession in the December Century. The difference between the two soldiers was that Mark Twain was thrown to writing prose; and more of the soldiers was that Mark Twain was thrown to writing prose; and more of the soldiers was that Mark Twain was thrown to writing prose; and more of the soldiers was that Mark Twain was thrown to writing prose; and more of the soldiers was that Mark Twain was thrown that he then and soldiers was that Mark Twain was thrown into such trepidation that he then and there abandoned forever the profession of arms, whereas General Grant made on that occasion the discovery that the 'nemy was as much atraid of him as he had been of them. "This," says General Grant, "was a view of the question I had never taken before, but it was one I never forgot afterwards. From that event to the close of the war, I never experienced trepidation upon confronting an enemy, though I always felt more or less anxiety."

Christmas Reverie.

"What are you going to buy your wife for a Christmas present?" Asked Gus De Smith of Judge Peterby.
"I'm thinking of geting her a piano."
"Can she play?"
"No, of course not. Do you think I'd be such a fool as to buy her a piano if she could play?"
