

DAN RICE'S RETURN

To New York to Run a Permanent Monster Circus.

HE IS THREE SCORE YEARS AND TEN

And Yet as Active and Cheery as a Lark--A Story of How Congress Once Adjourned to Attend his Show. A Prank Played on Henry Clay--He will Repeat Feats Our Parents Wondered At.

New York, Sept. 7.--Congress adjourned to attend a circus! Just imagine, says the Morning Advertiser. Dan Rice, one of the celebrated showmen of the past generation, tells the story, and of course vouches for its truth. Uncle Daniel is still left to us, and to all appearances is just as vigorous as when in April, 1850, he appeared in the circus ring at Washington as the "great jester and clown" to startle and delight the assembled statesmen.

The day had been set aside for Rice's benefit, and something out of the ordinary must be done. He did it in an unexpected manner. The members of both houses of Congress, the heads of departments, the President and Cabinet, and scores of leading people in the social life of the Capital received elaborate invitations printed on satin for the benefit performance that day. Nearly everybody accepted the invitation, and it was generally supposed that the bits of satin were free passes to the show.

Among the first to arrive at the tent was Henry Clay, with a party of ladies. His colored servant was in advance, and the satin invitations were presented as passes of admission.

"How many in the party?" sternly asked the doorkeeper, who had been drilled for his post.

"Twelve," answered the great leader, solemnly but confidentially.

"Twelve dollars!" exclaimed the doorman: "buy your tickets at the box office." Dan Rice was behind the canvas looking through a peephole and enjoying the evident agitation of Mr. Clay, when, after fumbling in his pockets, he was unable to find the necessary amount. The practical joker had provided for such emergencies, and had nearby a well known Washington tradesman of that period with his pockets stuffed with silver dollars. Henry Clay's embarrassment was relieved and his party passed in. He remarked: "I'll bet this is one of Dan's tricks."

Lewis Cass, who came later, was disposed to be ugly, but neither he nor others of the distinguished statesmen hesitated about taking the tradesman's money when necessary. It was a great day for Dan, and a big success. President Zach Taylor was there; so were Daniel Webster, John C. Calhoun, Stephen A. Douglas and scores of others who were part of the history of that epoch of national life. That Dan was a high roller is evinced by the fact that rattled off fifty original verses of "local hits," and everybody was scored, from the austere President down to the pages in Congress.

The same Dan Rice is with us to-day, virile, fun-making, and as full of ideas about circuses as an egg is of meat. When he was met with the other day "Uncle Dan" was actually figuring with some capitalists for the production of a great circus, calculated to make even New Yorkers stare. Just what the enterprise is nobody seems to know at present. Rice won't tell.

An elderly gentleman who, as a boy, saw Dan Rice at the old American Museum fifty years ago playing an engagement under P. T. Barnum's management as the "Young Hercules," said yesterday that Rice owes it to the public to anchor right here in New York and revive the time-honored circus. "You know," said the gentleman, "that there is, or ought to be, a vast difference between the city circus and one calculated to please a rural population. I know that Rice's ideas as to what a circus for New York should be are about correct."

Dan Rice was a performer in the ring, a horseman, a clown, a trainer, a manager and a general all-round circusman of wonderful resources. With all the years of experience his mind is ripe, his ideas mature, and he still believes in the glories of the circus. Remember that Ritz of Berlin and Sanger of London came over here especially in 1858 to see Dan Rice's ability as a trainer at Nible's Garden, and pronounced him the greatest horseman and trainer of his time. "Uncle Dan" will go into the ring again, in his character as clown and jester. He knows what the people want to see, and he has a very keen knowledge of how to cater to the public with horse drama.

If there are any grandfathers living to-day who saw Dan Rice's performance with his wonderful trained rhinoceros at old Nible's Garden, they can speak by the card of that startling exhibition. This was thirty-three years ago, but the children of those days have a vivid recollection of seeing Rice flying around the arena mounted upon the back of the ferocious-looking beast, while the audience held its breath. It was a startling novelty which had never been seen before or since.

Then there was Dan's white trick horse "Excelsior," who could pose in "statuary" tableaux. It made a great hit, and no doubt in the playbills of the day it was announced as "a performance of the most artistic and perfect character." This was true, as hundreds can attest.

The elephant, Lallah Rookh, came upon the scene a little later, and, under the guidance of this gifted trainer, was made to perform on the tight rope, greatly to the delight of thousands. Why cannot New York be entertained by something similar in these degenerate days? Uncle Dan is ready and willing to create an exhibition, a winter circus, which would rival all the shows of the world. All this requires capital, but Dan can show that such an enterprise will pay handsomely.

The old man is sprightly as a school boy, and all Gotham may yet have a chance of seeing him whirl around the ring drawn by kangaroos taught to leap, trot and dance on occasion requires, just as he did nearly half a century ago. How many of us are there who remember Dan Rice's "Equestrian pageant," "Ward's mission to China," "the English steepchases" and "the educated mules" at Nible's along in the "fifties"? These entertainments drew wonderfully well in those days, and something similar might be a great "go" now.

Coming down to 1871, Dan Rice's "Paris Pavilion" was an equestrian show at Fourteenth street between Second and Third Avenues, which attracted thousands. The lots upon which the tents were erected were leased from Hamilton Fish, secretary of State. James Fisk, jr., and Jay Gould were constant visitors to the performances, so "Uncle Dan" says.

Cleone Fisk recognized the genius of the jester and clown and sent for him to come to his office. Negotiations were in progress between Fisk and Rice which contemplated the production of a winter circus to eclipse everything heretofore attempted. In the spring of '71 in the South, Rice was shocked to receive a telegram at Macon, Ga., from Jay Gould, who was also interested in the enterprise, containing the sad intelligence that Fisk was dead. "Uncle Dan" thinks that this was the missing of the opportunity of his life.

The idea of training a blind horse for ring performances was Dan Rice's, and when Excelsior, Jr., was introduced to the public there was a pretty clear demonstration that the horse is next to man in intelligence. This horse could distinguish the meaning of the words of his master under certain circumstances, and was visited many times by Horace Grovel, Professor Agazzis, Oliver Wendell Holmes and others. A trainer having such skill as Dan Rice ought to be kept in New York to entertain the public, and no Roman circus or Paris hippodrome could produce a man of his counterpart. The jest, the keen mother wit of the clown are his to this day, and, no doubt, old New Yorkers would delight in seeing Dan Rice in the ring again. His white hair and gray tuft of Yankee chin-whisker mark the advance of years, but he bears them lightly. His sturdy figure is one of the picturesque sights on lower Broadway on sunny days.

What a fund of anecdote, what thousands of personal reminiscences are packed in that big, round head of Dan Rice. For fifty years he has traveled in state, up and down the highways and by ways of this broad land, and catered to the amusement of the multitude. In Europe he has caused vast audiences to wonder at his performances, and to pass his skill. Renewing his youth, Dan Rice to-day is preparing to give New York a winter circus which, it is needless to say, will be something thrillingly interesting.

FEVER AND SCURVY.

Terrible Sufferings of the Crew of the Bark Royal Tar.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 7.--The bark Royal Tar, from Australia, anchored in quarantine yesterday morning, reported fever and scurvy on board, and the captain and first mate dead.

The Royal Tar left Sydney last March, with Capt. T. A. Franklin, two mates, eleven seamen and a boy, bound for Frederick William Haven, Ingerman, Guinea. Shortly after arriving there fever broke out on board, the captain and four men being taken ill. Their medicines gave out and the captain soon died.

First Mate Rogers then took command and the ship sailed on June 5 for Humboldt, Cal. After a time Rogers also died of fever, and second Mate John McCall took command and succeeded in getting to San Francisco without any more deaths. All the crew were ill at one time or another, and most of the time there were only three men able to work on board. In July all stores gave out except tea and flour, and on this the crew had to live; no anti-scurvy medicines were on board and the men suffered fearfully. Ten days ago the German bark Hydra gave them a little meat and quinine.

The appearance of the men is frightful. Some are toothless, and others pitted and scarred with gangrene. It is believed the lives of all will be saved by care and rest.

WILL IGNORE FACTIONS.

What Secretary Sutton Says About the Irish League Convention.

OMAHA, Neb., Sept. 7.--John P. Sutton, Secretary of the Irish National League of America, when asked if the forthcoming convention at Chicago would be for or against Parnell, said:

"The convention will be perfectly independent of all Irish factions. When the convention was called the following cablegram was sent to the leader of each faction: 'Convention meets in Chicago October 1.' Parnell replied as follows: 'Regret that I cannot visit America in October; may possibly later. What do you suggest?'"

"Mr. Parnell probably wanted a further postponement of the convention, but the days for submission to the whims of Irish leaders have passed forever," said Mr. Sutton. "Mr. McCarthy, after many days of meditation, answered: 'Cablegram received. Thanks.' By Parnell in power and Parnell out of power, and by the members of McCarthy's following, whether united or disunited, the treatment accorded to the Irish National League has been cowardly, discourteous, and, I may say, treacherous."

MARTIN'S FERRY.

Farmers in the neighborhood of Cole-rain complain of dogs killing their sheep. Two farmers each report twenty-seven killed, another farmer forty-two, and another eighteen, all by two dogs. They will make affidavit to this effect before the County Commissioners at the meeting at St. Clairsville to-day.

Major Wm. McKinley will speak at the Smyrna fair to-morrow afternoon, Mingo on Thursday morning and Staubenville in the afternoon. Hon. J. B. Forker will speak at Cadiz, September 26.

Considerable interest is taken in the Belmont county Republican convention to be held at St. Clairsville to-day.
