

THE BANKING BILL.

Probable That Some Measure Will Become a Law.

THE SITUATION IN THE SENATE.

The Lack of Time in the House the Great Stumbling Block—Changes Must Be Made in the Senate—Representative Taylor Points Out some weak Places—The Purpose of the Bill Explained.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 17.—The passage by the house on Saturday of the bill "to promote the safety of national banks," makes it highly probable that some measure of the sort will become a law at the present session of Congress. The lack of time in the house is the great stumbling block to such legislation, and if a measure which commands general support gets through the lower branch there is usually no difficulty in getting it considered in the senate. It is by no means certain, however, that the bill will pass the senate as it goes from the house. Some opposition developed there, in spite of the large vote by which the bill was passed. It was not treated as a party measure in any sense, being advocated by Mr. Bacon, the Democratic chairman, and Mr. Walker, one of the strongest Republican members of the committee on banking. The essential objection urged was that of Mr. J. D. Taylor, of Ohio, that the bill would interfere with the practical business of a bank by requiring meetings of the boards of directors whenever application was made for loans by certain persons, whereas the power to act promptly ought to be lodged in two or three officers. The answer to this is that this formal approval of loans is only required where the officers of a bank are applicants for loans, and that the loans to outsiders according to the existing methods are not interfered with. The bill upon which the committee report was passed, introduced by Mr. Harter of Ohio, himself a practical banker, prohibited loans to active officers of a bank under any guarantee, and the bill now before the house has the approval of several experienced bankers who are members of the house committee. The report of the house committee explains the purpose and effect of the bill as follows:

"In the opinion of your committee, the recompliance with the settled policy of legislation with regard to the national banks, it was unnecessary to make a prohibition against the loaning of the funds of the bank so broad. Your committee was led to that conclusion in view of the fact that a large portion of that portion of it in which it is most desirable that the national banking system should be extended, the president of the bank is, generally, not exclusively, occupied by the discharge of his duties as such president. The actual executive officer of banks in these sections is ordinarily the cashier. The president and directors are generally selected from among men actively employed in other business.

"In the opinion of your committee, the result sought to be reached, to wit, the preventing of the misappropriation of the funds of the bank by the officers actually engaged in the duty of handling them, can be accomplished by making it unlawful for them to borrow any money from the bank except after the making of the loan has been requested and approved by the board of directors of the bank, or by the executive committee of such board, and by requiring that the comptroller of the currency shall be fully informed from time to time of the extent of such liabilities and of the persons to whom such loans are made.

"It is believed that the mischiefs to be prevented have arisen mainly, if not entirely, in cases where the loans made by the directors, officers and employees of the bank have been systematically concealed from the board of directors and that there exists no case in which the majority of the board of directors have intentionally permitted any loans to or use of the money of the bank by its directors or officers in amounts sufficient to render the bank insolvent."

"The bill may be taken up by the senate committee on finance at its regular meeting, but will undoubtedly be closely scrutinized before it is reported, for the members of the committee are jealous of financial measures which do not originate in their own ranks, and usually put them in a new form. The senate committee on finance is not disposed to press any general banking legislation at the present session of Congress, because they do not believe that it would pass both houses. They will undoubtedly consider the house measure, however, if it comes to them, and they may frame a measure of their own, based upon the recommendations of Comptroller Lacey, if action in the house is delayed.

REVERSED HIS DECISION.

Judge Pearce, of Steubenville, Changes His Base on the Local Option Matter. Special Dispatch to the Intelligencer.

STEUDEVILLE, OHIO, Feb. 17.—Judge Pearce announced this morning that after further consideration he had concluded that his recent decision, in which he held that the neglect of the township clerks to record preliminary proceedings when township local option was voted on and carried by the people, rendered the enforcement of the law defective, was not right.

Since his recent decision letters of inquiry have been received from all parts of the state in which prosecuting attorneys ask for Judge Pearce's rulings, as they have parallel cases before them. The change of base by Judge Pearce was brought out yesterday afternoon by a motion for leave to file a petition enjoining the state of Ohio in the case of Anton Rindor, who had plead guilty to two indictments for violating the local option law. His release before his fine and costs had been paid was asked for under Judge Pearce's ruling.

Judge Pearce holds that his construction put on the entry of the township clerk, in which he held that it was defective, was wrong and that it was sufficient as the entry of the result of the election was prima facie evidence for the state that the preliminary proceedings had been gone through with and it was necessary now for the defense to prove error.

Since Judge Pearce rendered his decision the speak-easies have been flourishing and "hop ten" has been sold openly to the Hungarian miners at Mt. Pleasant. No Dow tax revenues are received from this section of the county, where immense quantities of liquors are sold, and at the coming election the voters will repeal the local option law.
