THE STOLEN CURL.

New York Letter. Upon the shores of Lake Pontchartrain and on the southern border of the state of Mississippi is the lovely and quiet town of Pass Christian.

Among the fair pupils of the Lake Academy none were more beautiful than Rose Vertner, the sole heiress to all of her dotting father's cotton estates upon the Mississippi river.

A shower of golden curls fell upon her shoulders; blue, dreamy eyes, a bright, smiling face and a graceful form, added to a disposition of the truest womanly sweetness, made the young girl of fifteen particularly attractive to all who knew her.

One of Rosa's most ardent, though silent, admirers was Earl Griffith, son of a Mississippi planter whose estates lay adjoining that of Mr. Vertner; but between Mr. Vertner and Col. Griffith there existed great bitterness and for years the families had not spoken, though meeting constantly in social intercourse at the houses of neighboring planters.

The feud commenced long years before, in the old days before the war, when Mr. Vertner and Col. Griffith were rivals for the hand of Earl's mother.

Meeting at Pass Christian, thus it was that though Rosa could not see that Earl Griffith admired her and she felt that she was not indifferent to his gaze, both were governed by the remembrance of the feud existing between their parents, and gave no sign of the recognition of the other's feelings.

Toward the close of a lovely summer day the fair pupils of the institute had gone down to the long pier leading out into the lake to the bath house of the institution.

Soon a merry party of damsels were splashing about in the water. It was a pretty sight, and a handsome youth of twenty-one, clad in the stylish uniform of the Pass Christian Military Academy, paused and gazed upon the lovely scene.

Suddenly a shriek was heard, and a form was borne away by the tide out of reach of aid from her companions.

With the speed of a deer the young cadet sped down the pier, reached the bath house and bounded headlong into the water.

Vigorously did he breast the waves and soon overtook the girl, who was struggling to sustain herself above the water, for she was a fair swimmer.

Soon he came nearer, and despite that help was at hand her courage broke and she sank beneath the waters; while shrieks of distress from the shore showed that her companions believed her lost.

With a deep dive the youth succeeded in grasping the drowning girl, and with renewed strength started shoreward. Bravely did he struggle, and when alighted at the bath house two of the professors of the institution, who, alarmed by the cries of distress, had run down to the scene, swam out a few yards and relieved the third youth of his precious burden.

To the surprise of all, the young man turned once more seaward and commenced to swim down the coast.

In vain did they call to him from the shore. On he swam, he was no longer visible.

After continuing slowly and with strong and steady stroke down the coast the cadet swam toward a pier that projected some distance into the lake, and then drew himself, greatly fatigued, from the water.

Looking about to see that he was not watched he walked rapidly up the pier and struck off across the fields for the academy.

the Pass at school I loved you more dearly; and I blessed the kind fate that threw us together, untrammelled by the presence of our parents. Then, I felt that you controlled my life's happiness, and dearly have I enjoyed our stolen interviews. Now all is over, and we must part. I will do as your father asks me in his letter—return all you have sent me. Rosa, my own darling, good-by!

Thus the lovers parted and while Rosa returned to her father's plantation, a mile down the river, Earl Griffith leaped his horse into a cotton field that bordered the river bank and darted away in the direction of his own house, for death had laid his father in the grave and he was master and owner of the large estate.

Arriving at his door, a negro messenger from the Vertner plantation awaited his arrival and handed him a letter. He broke the seal, but his brow darkened as he read the contents.

"For her sake I will forbear; and for her sake I will return her letters—every little moment of her love; yes, all!" A few moments later an ebony messenger rode away, bearing in his hands a small package addressed to "Mr. Branch Vertner, Sunnyside Plantation."

Branch Vertner was pacing the broad veranda that encircled his handsome residence. A stern, haughty man, his brow was darkly clouded and his brow wore an angry expression, as ever and anon he glanced down the avenue, as if in expectancy.

"Ha! at last! I hope he has not dared to refuse my demand; if so—And he grasped the package held out by the negro boy.

Breaking the seal he glanced over the contents. The rown darkened when his face suddenly paled. The letters and love trinkets fell to the floor as he exclaimed: "What does this mean?"

In his hand he held a long, silken curl, flashing like golden strands in the light of the setting sun.

Upon a card attached he read: "Rescued from the waves, Pass Christian, June 15, 18—"

One moment he glanced at the card, his face changing with the emotion that swept over him, and then he called out to the retreating messenger: "Robert, come here!"

The negro then advanced, and quickly, to the Griffith manor. Present my best wishes to Mr. Earl Griffith and say that I request the pleasure of seeing him immediately at Sunny Side plantation."

And while the messenger started away at full speed, Mr. Vertner continued his walk up and down the veranda.

An hour had not passed when Earl Griffith rode up to the door, dismounted and ascended the broad steps, wearing upon his face a puzzled expression at his strange and unexpected summons to Sunny Side.

Advancing toward him, Branch Vertner extended his hand, while he said in a firm voice: "Earl Griffith, I never believed that you or one of your race would ever be invited across my threshold. Your package sent me this evening told me all; hence I bury the hatchet and offer my hand. You are a noble man and I believe will accept it."

BRANDSTIFFS AND PROVISIONS. CHICAGO, Ill., Feb. 26.—Wheat was quiet and weak to-day. There was a dearth of news of a character to demand a rise, and many old jobs concluded to get rid of their grain and stop sales, and some raddies by the others assisted to weaken prices. Cabbages were generally lower, domestic market dull and easy. Receipts from New York for that freighter had turned sellers and were trying to relet the freight room contracted for during the last week or two. A corn market was reported in the far northwest, but the indications here said that freighter had turned move eastward instead of southward. Lard cables were weak and the market being dull, generally quiet and nearly featureless, but the corn was tenacious and was weak.
