WHEELING, MAY 4, 1892.

Republican State Convention!

At a meeting of the State Central Committee, held at the city of Parkersburg, on February 27, 1892, it was ordered that a State Convention be held at the city of Martinsburg, on THURSDAY, the 6th day of May, 1892, to elect four (4) Delegates-at-Large and four (4) Alternates-at-Large to the Republican National Convention, to be held at the city of Minneapolis, Minnesota, on Tuesday, the 7th day of June, 1892, to nominate candidates to be supported for the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States; and also, in view of the change in the arrangement of the several Senatorial districts of this State, to elect members of the State Republican Central Committee, consisting of one person from each Senatorial district.

FIRST CONGRESSIONAL District Convention.

It is ordered that a District Convention of Republicans, and all others who favor the policy of Protection to American laborers, farmers and manufacturers and a sound currency, shall be held at Parkersburg, May 6, 1892, at 12 o'clock noon, for the purpose of choosing two delegates and two alternate delegates, to represent the First Congressional District in the National Republican Convention to be held in the city of Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota, on the 7th day of June, 1892, for the purpose of nominating candidates for President and Vice-President, to be voted for at the next National election, and for transacting such other business as may be brought before said convention. The Executive Committee of each county is requested to take early steps to have each county represented at said Convention. It is recommended that each county select one delegate for each one hundred (100) votes or fraction thereof (50 cast therein for President Harrison in 1888).

These New Yorkers and Mr. Blaine.

Those New York Republicans who refuse to accept Mr. Blaine's declination to be a presidential candidate as final, are in desperate straits, indeed. It is comforting to know that there is only a handful of them and that they will be obliged to come in out of the wet at last.

It is not surprising that there should be some to insist upon Mr. Blaine withdrawing his declination, for there are unreasonable people in all parties. But in this instance they are more than unreasonable. They are positively unjust and unkind to Mr. Blaine himself, for he has not only declared that he does not desire the nomination, but that it would be physically impossible for him to accept it if it were tendered him unanimously, as it would be if tendered at all.

Aside from this consideration, the action of the New York boomers is a reflection on Mr. Blaine. It will be remembered that in 1888 a similar situation existed just prior to the convention. There were enthusiastic Republicans who refused to accept the famous Florence letter as final, and insisted that he must be forced to accept whether he wanted the nomination or not. So strong did this movement become that it was necessary for him to write a second letter. This he did a few days before the convention, and a portion of it is worth quoting at this time, since there are expressions in it which apply to the present very bad case of thick-headedness with which certain New York leaders seem to be afflicted. Here it is:

A single phrase of my letter of January 25 from Florence has been treated by many of my vain friends as not absolutely conclusive in relation to my possible declination as offered to me. On the other hand, friends equally devoted and distinguished have construed to be an unconditional withdrawal of my name from the national convention. They have in consequence given their support to eminent gentlemen who are candidates for the Chicago nomination, some of whom would not, I am sure, have consented to assume that position if I had desired to represent the party in the presidential contest of 1888. If I should now, by speech or by silence, by commission or omission, permit my name, in any event, to come before the convention, I should incur the reproach of being unkind to those who have always been candid with me.

I am not willing that even one of my faithful supporters in the past should think me capable of paltering in a double sense with my words. Assuming that the presidential nomination could, by any possible chance be offered to me, I could not accept it without leaving in the minds of thousands of these men the impression that it had not been free from indirection, and therefore I could not accept it at all. The representations of malice have no weight, but the just displeasure of friends I could not patiently endure.

think him capable of paltering in a double sense with his words applies equally with regard to his letter of 1892. Every reason that made him desirous of being out of the race then exists now, and in addition other reasons, which he has stated. There should be no hesitancy in accepting him at his word. To do anything else, under the circumstances, would be unjust to him and reflect upon his integrity. As he himself said in 1888, he could not consent to be placed in such a position before the country as an acceptance now would put him in.

One Man's Testimony.

A naturalized Englishman, writing in the New York Press, evidently appreciates the benefits of protection, if some of our own people do not. It is, indeed, a remarkable fact that English working men who have had experience with the tariff policy of their own country generally show greater appreciation of the protective policy of the United States after working under it, than some of our own workmen who have never toiled in a free trade country, and who permit themselves to listen to free trade theorists.

This Englishman who writes for the Press refers to the fact that when he was a boy he worked in a cotton factory in Mossy, Lancashire, for sixty-two cents a week, laboring fourteen and a half hours per day. He came to this country, with many others who were burdened with debt. He says: "I would say here that, having worked in the manufacturing districts of New England, I do not know of one who left old England under those hard circumstances who did not soon bring his family over here, and, moreover, send back money enough to pay all his indebtedness."

This has been the experience of thousands of Englishmen who have come to America. They can be found in every manufacturing community. It is no wonder the gentleman above quoted is moved to ask the question, why it is, if England and the English people are so happy under free trade, and America is so burdened and downtrodden under protection, that so many thousand immigrants come to our shores every week, and why stowaways found on every steamer when forced to return are broken hearted?

He asks another question which he answers himself, as follows: Are there any steamers loaded with emigrants headed from the United States to Europe? The answer is I will answer myself. None go to England but those who are well supplied with good American dollars, and, by the by, no others are wanted there.

There is a good Protection argument in this answer.

The Sugar Question.

Beginners, we are under the impression that the removal of the tariff on raw sugar did this (made sugar cheap). So far from being a vindication of the principle upon which the McKinley inquiry is built, it is a condemnation of it, and an illustrious example of the beneficence of the Democratic principle of free raw material.—Register.

It is nothing of the kind. It is a vindication of the Republican policy, and a confirmation of the Republican doctrine that when a duty is placed on an article which we do not ourselves produce, or which we cannot produce in sufficient quantity to supply our home markets, it is a tax. This was the case with sugar and the Republicans removed the tax. On the other hand, we have enough coal, iron and lumber and other raw materials to not only supply our home markets, but to ship abroad. The tariff is maintained on these things to protect them from the competition of cheap foreign articles which are produced by pauper labor.

Quite a Difference.

At a meeting of the unemployed in London the red flag of anarchy was boldly displayed. Alongside of the blood-red emblem was a black flag with the inscription: "We demand the right to work."—Cable Dispatch from London.

Yet American workmen are asked to vote for the sort of tariff that England has.—Intelligencer.

Similar scenes were enacted on May Day in highly protected Chicago. It's a poor rule that won't work both ways.—Register.

This is a bare-faced falsehood. The procession in Chicago on May Day was not made up of unemployed men; there was no pitiful plea for the "right to work;" the three anarchist flags carried were not borne by men driven to desperation by oppression and lack of employment, and the Register knows it.

Prof. A. S. BELL, who is announced as a candidate for nomination for state superintendent of schools on the Republican ticket, is an Ohio county man who is well and favorably known throughout the state. Though a comparatively young man, Professor Bell is an experienced teacher, a practical educator, has good executive ability, and is in every way equipped to fill the office acceptably.

Now it is said that Tariff Reformer Cleveland has combined with sundry Democratic politicians to bring about the nomination of Chief Justice Fuller, seeing that it would be unwise to take the honor himself. What strange things happen in politics! Is it possible that Democrats are seriously considering the propriety of nominating the chief justice who concurred in the supreme court decisions that the McKinley bill and Speaker Reed's rulings were constitutional?

case, as well as the contiguous territory in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. An entire page is devoted to setting forth the advantages of Fairmont, W. Va., the center of the Upper Monongahela coal and coke field. The edition is apparently edited with great care, is handsomely illustrated and, altogether, reflects great credit on the enterprise of the publishers of the Gazette.

To-morrow, at Martinsburg, the West Virginia Republicans will adopt a platform and name four delegates-at-large to represent them in the national convention. It goes without saying that the council will be composed of representative men who will perform their duties well.

BREAKFAST BUDGET.

The French ministry of war has been engaged for more than a year in making experiments in the preservation of meat. The experiments have resulted in the discovery that frozen meat can be kept for eight months without any change in its appearance or powers of nourishment. The meat can be carried also on the railroads for four days without detriment, even in the hottest summer weather.

Mrs. Paulina, a native of Queensland, Holland, is said to be the smallest human being in the world. She is nearly sixteen years of age, her height is 18 inches and weight 7 pounds. Unlike most of the "midgits" she is remarkably pretty and accomplished, speaking four languages fluently.

MORNING SMILES.

"Suppose, now," said the examiner to the engineer applying for a chief engineer's certificate, "you have your pumps and valves all right and everything in working order and you start your pumps and get no water, what is the first thing you would do?" Engineer—"I would look over the side, sir." Examiner—"Look over the side! What would you look over the side for?" Engineer—"I'd want to know if there was any water to pump, sir." He passed.—Dundee News.

HUSBANDY.

Margaret Douglas, in Harper's Young People. Husbandy, my baby, 'tis time that thou wert sleeping. Thy mother holds thee to her breast, And woos thee gently to thy rest; Then hush thy childish weeping.

Husbandy, my darling, the birdies long have slumbered. I heard their mother softly sing, While she sat the nestled 'neath her wing, And each wee bird she numbered.

Husbandy, my dear one, the kitties, too, are taking. I'm busy to them gently purring— In pussy talk those words I heard: "Sleep, dears, while watch I'm keeping."

Husbandy, my loved one, the bossy cow is mooing: Her little calf sleeps by her side, And fears no ill that may befall, But happy dreams is wooing.

Hush, my baby darling, the pony low is neighing: Her little colt is dreaming too, Of grassy fields all wet with dew, Where happy colts are playing.

Husbandy, my baby, all these their rest are taking. So close thy little sleepy eyes, And sleep until they all arise To greet thee at thy waking.

A Kind Word from a Good Brother. Mr. C. B. A COWARDLY POLICY. The "Register" advises West Virginia Congressman to straddle the silver issue.

We believe the West Virginia delegation will do their part a grand service and themselves credit by voting to-morrow to postpone the consideration of the bill at this time.
