NOT CAREY'S BODY.
 The Drowned Man Found down the River Unidentified.
 The body found opposite Sunfish island, on the Ohio shore, on Sunday, was described so very much as Mr. Carey's body would have been that there seemed little doubt that it was his. Yesterday morning his father-in-law, Mr. Hitchcock, an attaché of Paige, Carey & Co., and Mr. Carney, his partner in the Hotel Windsor, went down. They found the body of a smaller man than Mr. Carey, with a long gray beard and no mustache. There was nothing on his person but a postal card addressed to Anton Roberts, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BAIL AGAIN REFUSED

To Dr. Garrison—Judge Campbell's Decision the Precedent.

THE TRIAL SET FOR NEXT MONDAY.

Counsel for the Defense Present Arguments to Sustain Their Application for Admission to Bail—Judge Paul Refuses the Application and the State Presses for a Speedy Trial.

Dr. George I. Garrison's application to be released on bail was heard yesterday afternoon by Judge Paul, immediately after the jury in the Leslie murder trial had retired. The court refused the application, and with the consent of counsel for both sides, set Monday, May 16, as the day on which a new trial will begin.

Counsel for the defense read an affidavit, sworn to by Dr. C. F. Ulrich, stating that Dr. Garrison's little boy was very ill, and that the child required the services of a physician and a nurse, and that Dr. Garrison could assist in both capacities. Mr. Howard objected to the filing of the affidavit, as it had nothing to do with the case. The court reserved its decision on the filing of the affidavit until after the arguments of counsel on the application for bail had been heard.

Colonel Arnett presented the views of the defense on the application. He claimed that the offense with which Dr. Garrison stood charged was strictly bailable. He could guarantee that Dr. Garrison would be on hand for trial if he were permitted to give bail. There had not been a case, he said, in the past twenty-five years where a man had been refused bail when he made an application, from the case of Schumlbach to that of Church. Even a justice of the peace, in cases not involving capital punishment, could allow the accused to be released on bail, provided the bond required was not less than $500.

Mr. Howard stated that, while the state always opposed the granting of bail in such cases as the one at issue, yet it was always willing to give the defendant a trial. He therefore suggested that the trial be set for Monday, May 16. He and Captain Dovenor had a case set for trial on that day, but were willing to put it off.

Mr. Sommerville contended that this had nothing to do with the case. If Dr. Garrison was entitled to bail, he ought to be free right now, to aid his counsel in the preparation of his case. Even if the trial referred to were going on at that instant, Dr. Garrison was entitled to his freedom. When Judge Campbell entered his decision, refusing Dr. Garrison bail, he was to be tried for murder in the first degree; since then it had been settled that he could not be tried for that offense. Since Judge Campbell's decision the accused had been tried to a jury, and the trial had resulted in the jury refusing to pronounce him guilty of any offense. Neither of these two leading features were present, when Judge Campbell decided the application unfavorably. In cases where there was no possibility of the death penalty being inflicted, the accused was entitled to bail, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. Sommerville claimed that the whole matter narrowed itself down to the question, whether the defendant would flee from justice. There was no danger of this, taken in connection with Dr. Garrison's having given himself up, his knowledge that a jury had refused to find him guilty of any offense, and his further knowledge, that he ran no risk of losing his life by a trial. The court replied that the matter of bail in this case was in the discretion of the court. Judge Campbell was of the opinion that bail could not be given, whether the defendant might be found guilty of murder in the first or second degree. He had been sustained by the supreme court refusing to grant an appeal. The affidavit filed was calculated to excite, Judge Paul said, and did excite, the sympathy of the court, but he did not think it had anything to do with the point at issue. He was compelled to deny the motion.

His honor then offered to set any date for the trial counsel might agree upon, and Monday, May 16, was selected for the opening of the trial. The clerk was instructed to summon the same witnesses for both sides, and court adjourned.

The fact that the new trial was set at so early a date gave rise to a good deal of comment, and much speculation was indulged in as to whether a jury could be obtained, the present long-continued efforts in that direction being still fresh in the public mind. It has been argued, however, that it will be less difficult to secure a jury a week from now than it will be three months hence, as the case by that time will have been more thoroughly discussed, and the opinions of jurors more thoroughly formed. In addition to this, Dr. Garrison is entitled to a speedy trial, and to keep him waiting three months more will detain him that much longer in jail, with the prospects of a final adjudication of his case further away than ever.
