pital.

The electric street cars, which, owing to a difference between the company and the power company, have been at a standstill for six months, were started again yesterday.

At the approaching election for member of the city council here, successors to three Republicans will be elected and to two Democrats. The Republicans expect to gain one and perhaps two members. The Republicans are quietly working while the enemy is fighting for federal positions.

working winter the enemy is against for federal positions.

Fruit growers of this section express great expectations of a big crop. The swelling buds, they say, are entirely uninjured, and nothing but severe late frosts will injure the crop. ports that Morgantown is to have a glass house. The work of building will be commenced within a week. The owner says he will be making glassware by June 1.

by June 1.

Mr. John J. Walsh, an experienced glass manufacturer, is here, and has signed a contract with our people for the erection of what is known as a tank furnace for the manufacture of glass fruit jars, bottles and other glass goods. The capacity of this house is equal to that of a twelve potfurnace. The building will be of structural iron. The establishment will employ about sixty-five hands. five hands

This is the third factory to locate on the property of the Building and Investment Company.

Other large and important concerns are negotiating with the company and there are excellent prospects of securing several of them.

The prosperity of Morgantown is now reasonably assured. The present contracts will necessitate the erection of from thirty to fifty dwelling houses to accommodate the employes. THE FAIRMONT GLASS HOUSES.

The Fairmont Free Press of this week has the following:

The glass factories continue to be very busy, and desire to increase their forces. There are now engaged at the Sloan fac-tory about 135 people, and Mr. D. J. story about 185 people, and Mr. D. J. Sloan is down east hunting more workmen, who will be here soon. The company need girls and boys and pay fair wages to beginners. Messrs, J. A. and M. B. McDonald, of Fostoria, Ohio, have recently been added to the engraving rooms. J. A. Serig, of Wheeling, has charge of the etching rooms. The feeters is making heautiful ware, which has charge of the etching rooms. The factory is making beautiful ware, which is going to all parts of the United States. The orders continue to come, and the company is well stocked in that line. The wares being of superior make and finish, of course it sells readily. The bottle and fruit jar factory is about in the lix for workmen and orders as is the tunabler factory. Hands are serges and the fix for workmen and orders as is the tumbler factory. Hands are scarce and orders plenty. From the piles of wares stacked and ready for shipment, one would be inclined to think that the whole world might be supplied from this point with beer bottles, but it is only a drop in the bucket as to being equal to the number required. The ware is good, and the refilling of orders bear testimony to the fact.

These things all go to prove that Fairmont has two No. 1 glass factories that rank among the best in the country.

THE OLD CHANCELLOR.

How Bismarck Prevented the Abdication of the Emperor William I. Dr. W. D. Byoank in the Literary Digest

The world is not yet rid of Bismarck and his words still have weight. When he tells the story of the great war in his way, the German government does not think it beneath its dignity to prove with authentic documents that King William also played an important part in the matter of that famous Ems telegram. But every one knows that if there had not been in the beginning of Prussia's greatest trial a man with creative genius at the head of affairs that time would have been less advancreative genius at the head of affairs that time would have been less advantageous to her.

Bismarck entered the ministry on September 24, 1862. King William was wedged in between his conscience as a ruler and his duty toward the constitution. The first prompted him to carry on the reorganization of the army in spite of all opposition from the parliament; the second demanded that he should let the landtag have its way. The king had long thought of calling Bismarck to the head of affairs. If the landtag had to be opposed, Bismarck was the right kind of prime minister. But William I feared that the rugged Pommeranian would be too hasty; would force him into a coup d'etat against the parliament and the people. A Hohenzollern is no Bonaparte! no imitations of Napoleon III in Prussia! a Bismarck ministry should only be resorted to at the last moment.

Had the right moment already passed when, on September 23, the landtag refused to vote the military bill? The king no longer believed himself equal to the emergency. There was opposition everywhere. His ministers inclined to agree with the majority of the landtag, the crown prince was under English influence and favored the op-clined to agree with the majority of the landing, the crown prince was under English influence and favored the opposition from constitutional principles. Nothing seemed left to the king but to lay down his crown. He understood his times no longer, and wished to give the roins of government to a younger man. When Roon, the minister of war, came to Habishure on that same 23d of came to Babelsburg on that same 23d of came to Babelsburg on that same 23d of September to report the result of the parliamentary vote he found the king in very low spirits.

"What is to be done?" said the king, pointing to the resignations which had been handed in by some of the ministry.

"Why does not vour majesty summon Bismarck?" asked Roon.

"I am afraid Bismarck will not accept now," answered the king. "Besides, he is not here; he is in Paris, and I cannot speak with him about these matters."

"Unt he is here and willing to act according to your majesty's wishes." answered Roon. He stood in friendly relation to Bismarck, in whom he had long recognized the capable minister. He had telegraphed to Paris on his own responsibility, "La poire est mure," he worded his message, perhaps the only joke which dry old Roon ever made in his life. Bismarck came to Berlin. His first visit was to the crown prince and then he proceeded to Babelsberg. The memorable meeting took place in the park. The king looked worried, and silently handed Bismarck a paper; it was the act of abdication.

Bismarck looked hard at the king. "Surely matters can never come to this in Prussia?" he said.

"I have tried everything," answered the king; "there is no other way out of the difficulty. My ministers are against me, my son is against me, ever you have been with him before you came here. If I cannot come to an agreement with you to-day, then this paper will appear in the Staats-Ansciger and my son may see how to get out of the difficulty. I cannot reign against my conviction."

Bismarck returned the paper. He excused himself for having visited the lation to Bismarck, in whom he had viction."

Bismarck returned the paper. He excused himself for having visited the crown prince first, and declared that he only wished to serve the king, who should not even think of abdication. William I looked at the document in his hand and asket: "Dare you govern without a majority?" "Yes, your majesty." "Without a budget?" "Yes," "Without giving up the reorganization of the army?" "Yes." "Very well." said the king; "I have here a program." He took from his breast pocket some sheets closely covered with writing. Bismarck's eye fell upon the rules for the organization of provincial government. "That is not the question just now," he said, "it is of little moment whether the towns or the country have greater influence in the provincial assemblies. What we have to settle first is, who shall rule in Prussia, the king or the majority of the chambers? When that is settled everything will be right. If your majesty grant me your confidence I am ready to serve you. But no program! It would hamper us both."

The king walked silently by the side of the statesman. He had become both."

The king walked silently by the side of the statesman. He had become very thoughtful. They crossed a wooden bridge built over a ravine. The king took the papers and began nervouely to tear them into shreds. That was his answer. Bismarck picked up the little hits of paper and said. "Deep the little hits of paper and said." onely to tear them into shreds. That was his answer. Bismarck picked up the little bits of paper and said: "Does it not appear to your majesty better to throw these things into the fireplace? They could be found here, and everybody knows your majesty's handwriting." The sheets were returned to the king's pocket. The king had become quite another man and began to speak of the formalities which had to be settled. He went home full of determination, like a Hohenzollern who has a duty to perform.

And Bismarck? Perhaps he also carried his head a little higher on his return from this interview. He was not afraid of the crisis. "Such crises are the weather in which Prussia must grow, if we make fearless, perhaps inconsiderate, use of them." Consideration for others is not Bismarck's strong point ovidently. The little storm and Prussia about the army organization he thinks a small matter.
