

CLOSED-BOSTON BANKRUPT SHOE CO.

portions, so densely packed, perfect order was out of the question. There was the usual number of children present, not caring to hear, and commenting in tones almost as loud as the orators, on the unusual scenes, and too many thoughtless women who came to see rather than hear, but when the speaking began so clear and pleasantly audible were the voices that fairly good order was soon prevalent, and the addresses were heard with ease.

When the confusion of the arrival of the crowd had somewhat subsided, Rt. Rev. Monsignor Sullivan, standing on the cathedral porch, where a large number of the clergy were gathered, addressed the bishop as follows:

Most Reverend Archbishop:—I need not assure you that conflicting feelings fill the breasts of the clergy and laity who are gathered around you this evening. Gladness and sorrow, strangely coexistent, blend. We are all proud and rejoice because our little diocese, in your beloved person, has attracted the special attention of that portion of the hierarchy of the United States upon which devolved the duty of providing a coadjutor and successor to the great metropolitan, Most Rev. Archbishop P. R. Kenrick, of St. Louis. We are proud that your eminent qualifications and noted success as bishop of this comparatively unimportant see impelled the very reverend and reverend clergy of the great city of St. Louis to urge the sovereign pontiff to appoint your grace their archbishop. We rejoice because it pleased the holy see to look favorably on the most earnest supplications of all those whose hearts and souls were set on having your grace as the coadjutor for the present and the metropolitan of St. Louis.

In our gladness, we most reverently thank the illustrious Sovereign Pontiff Leo XIII for the selection and consequent honor to the Diocese of Wheeling as well as to yourself, Most Rev. Archbishop. We thank the most Rev. Archbishops and the clergy who recommended you to the Holy See as the entirely fitting aid and successor to the great dean of the American hierarchy Dr. Kenrick. Most devoutly we thank the Holy Spirit who inspired the pontiff and prelates and priests to make a choice which we confidently anticipate will redound to the advantage of St. Louis, to the honor of the American hierarchy, to the good of our blessed religion and ultimately to the glory of God. These and similar considerations warrant our gladness.

We congratulate you, most reverend Archbishop, most warmly on your well merited promotion, but sorrow has accompanied our gladness from the day on which it was announced that the Rt. Rev. Bishop of Wheeling was appointed Coadjutor, with the right of succession, to the Most Rev. Dr. Kenrick, of St. Louis. It could not be otherwise. During the eighteen years of your episcopate you were thoroughly the bishop and father of the clergy and laity of the Diocese of Wheeling. Year after year the worthy laity grew in affection and love for their bishop. Your great abilities and splendid attainments challenge the admiration of all, Catholic and non-Catholic. Your great heart responded, and your paternal and episcopal love went out to all and was noticed and gratefully appreciated.

No wonder sorrow goes along with our gladness and rejoicing. No wonder that your devoted clergy and faithful laity gather here to-night to honor you—to solicit your last blessing as their chief pastor and to bid you farewell. In the name of the diocese of Wheeling, as its administrator, I bid you grace a loving farewell. In my official capacity I thank the very Rev. and Rev. clergy of St. Louis who are here to-night to honor you on this occasion and to escort you to your new and wider and higher field of labor in the cause of religion and of God.

Very Rev. and Rev. Fathers of the archdiocese of St. Louis, our loss is St. Louis' gain; and hence whilst you most heartily welcome your new chief pastor—coadjutor for a while and then archbishop, we sadly and sorrowfully, though entirely submissive to what the Holy See has ordained, bid our bishop a heart-felt, loving farewell, assuring him that we will ever cherish the most pleasant recollections of his chief pastorate here and ever follow his grace with our most fervent prayers.

Hon. T. S. Riley was introduced, and on behalf of the Catholic societies made an address, expressing the sorrow of the people, both Catholics and non-Catholics, at the impending parting. He paid the Archbishop a high tribute as a man and a priest, and recalling the demonstration at the same place two years ago on the occasion of the Bishop's return from Europe, and his expression at that time of the hope that he might long serve the church and work with the people of this diocese, he said he felt sure the departure was not of the Bishop's choice; that it had for him a pang not less poignant than for the people. He thanked the Bishop for his untiring zeal and fatherly care, and in the name of the assemblage and the church bade him good bye and God speed.

When the applause which testified the unanimous approval by the crowd of the sentiments so eloquently expressed by Mr. Riley had subsided, the archbishop advanced to the front of the cathedral porch. His appearance was the signal for rousing cheers. While these continued he looked out upon the solid mass of people which packed Eoff street almost solidly from Fourteenth street to Thirteenth, and when the assemblage became quiet his deliberate, pleasant words were heard, his voice being singularly full and powerful. He said:

"I am overwhelmed, my friends and neighbors, by this magnificent demonstration." He said such an outpouring, when its significance was considered, must deeply impress and inspire any human being. He could not misconstrue its meaning after the many expressions he had received from the people of the diocese, and after the words he had just listened to from the representative of those here gathered. A bishop, he held, ought to be and was something besides a spiritual pastor feeding his flock with most portions of the truth. He should be also a leader in thought, a director and inspirer of the public mind. He had striven to fulfill his idea of his duty in this direction, and he felt gratified at the numerous testimonials that his labors had not been in vain.

He ascribed the feeling manifested all over the diocese on the occasion of his transferring the duties of the office he had filled for years into the hands of another to these reasons: He had ever upheld with all his strength the cause of public morality and respect for constituted authority, and had set his face against all that tended to undermine social order and the welfare of the community; and he had always been on the side of the best interests of the state which he was proud to claim as the place of his nativity.

When he had stood here and spoken from the same place on the occasion of the impressive welcome with which his people had greeted him on his return from a foreign land, he had expressed a hope to be allowed all the years of his life to labor in and for this diocese. Then he had little reason to expect that hope might ever be disappointed, and he was sincere in its expression.

"I assure you," he continued, "that only the high and solemn sense of duty made me accept this change."

He predicted a great future for the diocese of Wheeling and the state of West Virginia, and said its advancement and increase, spiritual and material, would be regarded by none of its children with more grateful pride than by himself in his new home beyond the Mississippi.

He several times referred with pleasure to the expressions of regret at his departure by non-Catholics, and in commenting on the growth of the diocese under his administration, said he felt grateful for the hearty co-operation of his people, the zeal and ability of the clergy.

Before noon to-morrow he would be speeding on his way to his new home beyond the Mississippi. When it came to the moment that he must say the word which caused a pang to the heart of friends about to sever—"farewell"—he prayed that a blessing might fall on all, and especially upon the devoted children who stood before him. The members of the societies then knelt upon the ground and all in the vast assemblage uncovered and bowed their heads, while the Bishop pronounced a benediction.

Archbishop Kain then announced that it had been part of the programme that after the addresses all who desired might shake him by the hand, but in view of the large number present it had been deemed wise to abandon this part of the programme. He felt that it would be better for them and better for him not to remain an hour or so for that purpose.

Throughout the address it was frequently punctuated by hearty applause, and at its close three cheers, thrice repeated, were given for the archbishop, with cheers for Hon. T. S. Riley and Right Rev. Monsignor Sullivan, now the administrator of the diocese.

The crowd reluctantly dispersed and the marching organizations moved down Eoff and Fourteenth streets and up Market.

A notable feature of the gathering which heard the bishop's farewell address was the number of small children, not a few babes in arms, whose parents strove to impress the unusual and imposing historical scene upon their young memories.

THE BANQUET

Tendered by the Knights of St. George to the Archbishop.

The banquet was given to the retiring bishop at the Windsor Hotel by the Knights of St. George. Much of the credit for the successful affair is due to the committee on arrangements, composed of Seaton Alexander, Christian Blum, A. G. Hadlich, John J. Coniff, Charles R. Miller, George J. Mathison and Thomas S. Riley, who worked hard and faithfully to make the occasion what it was, one long to be remembered by all who were so fortunate as to be present.

The lobbies of the Windsor were crowded with friends of the bishop when the carriage drove up with him and others. When he entered the building the scene was an unusual and impressive one. With almost one accord the young ladies, young men and girls endeavored to say a last farewell to the bishop. He was visibly affected. Over a hundred and fifty were present at the banquet, including the committee of the St. Louis clergy here to act as an escort to Archbishop Kain on his trip to his new post of duty. Following is the distinguished St. Louis party: Vicar General Very Rev. H. Mandelsaepen; Chancellor Very Rev. H. Vandersanden; Reverend Fathers, M. J. McCabe, Sacred Heart; M. Tobyn, Sts. Mary and Joseph; W. Walsh, St. Bridget's; C. P. Smith, St. Agnes's; Edward Fenton, Visitation; P. N. Fallon, Holy Name; T. A. Butler, St. Cronin; P. J. McNamee, St. James; J. J. Flanagan, Holy Name; E. A. Schindel, St. Boniface; J. J. Head, Annunciation; Andrew J. Kenny, Passionist; Thomas P. Brown, E. J. Devries, Michael O'Neill, James Devine, George Mathison, James McGinley, Patrick Kennedy, John A. Howard, Fred Wingerter, and others.

J. Kain, was working at his childhood's home on the banks of the Sheban don, in the flush of young manhood, quietly, modestly, but eloquently. Here was found the second Bishop of Wheeling, a worthy successor of the revered Bishop Whalen. Since then eighteen years have passed and no one has said that Rome made a mistake when she laid her hands on the young priest, Kain, and made him bishop. "To those who come to us from St. Louis, we would say that we surrender the finest jewel in our diadem, but we flatter ourselves that we will not be forgotten; we who have seen his struggles, trials and triumphs."

To the toast "The Archbishop of Oxyrynchus" the response was by Rev. Father Walsh, of St. Louis. He felt that a great mistake had been made in the selection of a man to respond to this toast. "He knew of no reason why he would have been selected, except that he was the eldest of the delegation and the best looking. [Laughter.] "I thank you from my heart in the name of the delegation from St. Louis for the magnificent demonstration to-day which has shown the love and esteem in which the reverend archbishop is held. It was a good thing for us to come to West Virginia. Now, thank God he's ours. In a true sense I am sorry for you. But now, in a sense the priests of St. Louis did this work. When our venerable archbishop was unable to perform his labors we petitioned the archbishops for a coadjutor, and got him." Turning to the archbishop the speaker said, "We will give you enough to eat, we will give you enough to do, and we give you our hearts. [Applause.] No man can live in St. Louis and say a word against Archbishop Kain. He is the idol of our clergy." Concluding he said that St. Louis awaits the coadjutor; a city often styled the "Rome of the west," with her three hundred Catholic clergymen, a perfectly equipped diocese, and we place it all in the hands of Archbishop Kain, and will love and obey him."

Captain Mathison responded to the toast "The Knights of St. George" in a neat and effective manner.

The final response was by Archbishop Kain, and was one of the most touching and feeling of talks. He felt deeply grateful for the honors that had been showered upon him this evening, and had tried to listen with becoming humility to words of praise and eulogy but he was but human and a man, and it had been with an effort that he had repressed some sentiments of pride. "I must confess that I hardly know myself, and have been thinking that my friends must be looking through magnifying glasses, though of course I give them credit for sincerity, and I hope to God that their prophecies of my future may be true. I have taken a pride in my work as priest and bishop in the mountains of the little state of West Virginia, and have had no ambition beyond the deep reverence always experienced at the hands of my people."

"I will say to my friends from the banks of the Mississippi, that while I know nothing of the qualities of the waters of that stream, I do know something of the waters of the mighty Nile, for as you know I am an Egyptian archbishop, and I will say also that there is nothing more inspiring than the Ohio river water which we have been drinking this evening."

"I thank the Knights of Saint George for the honor they have done me; I thank all who took part in the magnificent demonstration; and I thank the members of the press of Wheeling for the fairness with which they have reported our proceedings, and I expect if they should visit me I would be more accessible than I am reported to have been on a recent visit there, by the St. Louis papers. Good bye; good night; God bless you."

The committee of Wheeling Catholics that will accompany Archbishop Kain to St. Louis is composed of the following gentlemen: William Foose, John Sheekey, William C. Handlan, M. J. O'Kane, E. B. Carney, Capt. Robert Devries, Michael O'Neill, James Devine, George Mathison, James McGinley, Patrick Kennedy, John A. Howard, Fred Wingerter, and others.

PITTSBURGH SUFFERS.

Much Damage Done in the City and to Crops in the Country. PITTSBURGH, Pa., August 29.—Reports from the surrounding towns indicate that great damage was done by yesterday's storm. Crops and fruit trees were destroyed, telegraph lines prostrated and heavy washouts are reported along the various railroads leading into the city.

From two to four inches of rain fell during the day and at one time last night the wind acquired a velocity of 24 miles an hour. In this city a vast amount of damage was done, particularly in the Thirty-second ward, where trees were uprooted, fences prostrated, barns and houses unroofed and great fields of grain leveled to the ground. A rough estimate of the damage in this ward alone is $20,000.

At New Castle a huge land slide on the Pittsburgh & Western tracks near New Castle Junction caused an engine and fourteen freight cars to be derailed. Two negroes who were seen on the cars are missing, and it is thought that they have been killed and buried underneath the wrecked cars.

The rain was received with delight by the river men, who hoped for a rise in river sufficient to allow the shipment of the 23,000,000 bushels of coal now lying along the shores. They will be disappointed, however, as the rise will not exceed five feet, and as much more would be necessary to float the barges with safety.
