WHEELING, OCTOBER 25, 1893.

The Senate's Alleged Mind. At the hour of going to press the senate compromise was off and senators gave it out that unconditional repeal will shortly pass. By noon to-day some other conclusion may be reached.

In view of the vacillating policy of the senate it is impossible to say what it may do and unsafe to place confidence in any policy that a majority of the majority may formulate. Where there is so much cowardice, so much intrigue, so much bad faith, who can tell what is to come out of it?

This much, at least, may be relied on -the President will not consent to any scheme of surrender and will keep the screws turned down hard until the senate shall arrive at a definite conclusion and have done with the silver question.

The President and a large unjority of the Republican senators are on the right side. This is all the people have to depend on. For the rest they will have to wait, watching as they wait.

Tur sennte of the United States can turn more sommersaults in a given time than any professional acrobat who has ever come before the country.

WHAT a sorry plight! There is a great party in the senate eager to surrender and nobody to surrender to What is to become of those remarkable articles of agreement bearing those illustrious names, every one a veritable John Hancock?

Republicans Are Not Deceived.

Some of the esteemed opposition think they are playing a remarkably shrewd game, so exceedingly fine that it cannot be seen through. They perceive that the country is out of sorts with the senate for its criminal disregard of the public welfare and of common decency.

They hear the people denouncing the obstructing senators and calling on the majority to assert the right of the majority to rule. In all this they see their party's chance to accomplish something further on. They were opposed to the house of representatives doing business when Mr. Reed was speaker, and the Democratic minority resorted to every stratagem to prevent action by the ma-

In these days they regarded as nothing short of infamous the Republican determination to conduct the business of the house on business principles. They appealed to the country to join them in resenting what they called a scheme of revolution concocted by the Republicans in the house and by them attempted to be put in execution, an attempt persisted in until the majority established beyond question its control over the house.

Now in power, Democrats are veering around to another quarter. They would like to exercise the rights of the majority. They wish to enact some legislation. They are not particularly in love with the silver legislation to which the President is compelling them, but they do want to wipe out the election laws and the protective tariff laws,

These objects they would like to accomplish without resorting to cutting off debate in the senate, but since every other way may be closed to them they are moving towards cloture. In this they are entirely right. If they have a majority it is their right to show that majority on the record after a full and fair discussion. The droll feature of it all is that the Republicans are supposed to be blissfully ignorant of the real meaning of this remarkable moral awakening on the Democratic side.

There is an elish joy, something much more tickling than "ghoulish glee," over the prospect of fooling somebody into a trap.

To save the wounding of Democratic feelings it is to be hoped that Republicans may consent to play the role for which their friends on the other side have east them. The Bold Buccapeer who falls asleep on the stage does not miss anything that is going on, and he satisfies the management and pleases the audience.

No wonder they are hurrying to Chicago-it is now so cheap that nobody can afford to miss it. It is a great pleasure to the Intelligencer to be able to show its friends how they can see the World's Fair well in a very short time and save money on the trip.

The Missouri compromise wasn't : marker to the silver compromise which was compromised out of existence alas soon as it had compromised about three dozen Democratic senators.

Men and brethren, this thing is a tragedy, relieved by the usual streak of

In Search of Information.

Seven members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union went slumming in Chicago. They were accompanied by detectives and the busband of one of the women. They vis ited the dens in which fallen women find a lodgement and drive a vicious traffle

"Three of the party were given a view of a nude dance in a private parlor. They were all horrified. What they saw was far beyond their expectation Two of the women were much overcome resulting in a "condition that borders on nervous prostration," says one of the sisters of the union. It was a frightful experience.

The aim of the tour of the dens of infamy was to discover what brought their inmates to their low estate. Those who were willing to talk about it said it was lack of work. The visitors saw the fallen ones drinking and smoking cigarettes, "facts of great importance in our crusade against strong drink and tobacco, for they show that the use of either may lead to fearful results."

It is true beyond question that many a poor girl thinks she is driven to a life of shame because she cannot earn an honest living and has no friends. Just as undeniably there are those who prefer to tread the downward path rather than to do such work as they can get. Too proud to do what they consider menial work, for example, but not too proud to lead a life of sin-

The good women who went slumming misapprehend the situation with regard to drink and tobacco. There are American women who smoke, but the practice is not common among them. Theoretically, tobacco may be degrading. Certainly its use by women is not to be commended. All the same, it used to be common enough on the plantation and on the western farm of southern settlement. Plenty of this generation can recall the old grandmother, some the honored mother, who eat by the fireside drawing comfort from a pipe. These women were good mothers and true wives, as are their suc cessors who have inherited the pipe.

It is not a fondness for tobacco that drives women to a life that is worse than death. Strong drink makes its contribution to the stock in trade of the brothel. It figures as a prime cause and as a collateral cause, but its quota is not large comparatively. The use of intoxicants and of tobacco among degraded women is much more a result than a cause of the life they lead.

It is not necessary for sensative women to expose themselves to the pain of a slumming tour to learn what it is that brings the unfortunates where they are. It is an old subject and no new lights are to be thrown on it. It has to do with human nature, which has not changed greatly from the beginning.

For every fallen woman there has been a fallez man. There are exceptions, but the great peopling of the cities of the lost is due to the perfidy of men, or the love of showy raiment, or both. Any analysis of the question which leaves out these prime factors is faulty and leads to wrong conclusions. In the art gallery at the World's Fair is a terrifying painting, "Don Juan in Hell," his victims there to add to the terture. Don Juan is a type.

There might be no gill of strong drink nade, no cunce of tobacco produced in all the world, but the absence of these would not deprive the dens of iniquity of that they feed on. A crusade against such evils as the temperance women eaw will have to be based on something that is breader and that strikes deeper than mere abstinence from strong drink and tobacco, however desirable that abstinence may be.

The way to root out the social evil has not been discovered. Slumming tours by good women will not do it

He put Hubbel to bed at the him. He put Hubbel to bed at the Blennerhassett and started out to see the town, carrying about $50 and a gold watch. About 2 a.m. he wandered on the Ohio railroad track in an unfrequented part of the city. A man approached and asked him to change $5. He did so, and the man said, "You are pretty fresh." He then struck Devore with a sand bag. Devore felt on the track as a freight train backed down. To save his body he throw his right hand on the track and the train passed over his hand, mashing it off.

Dr. Sweetland, of Edwardsburg, Mich., editor of the Aryus, identified the body of one of the victims identified the body of one of the victims as that of his sister, Mrs. Eviline Aldrich of Edwardsburg, and the body was shipped to that place last night. The coroner has just received a dispatch from J. D. Wood, of Cato, N. Y., stating that the body is that of his wife. She was identified by both men by her clothing. Mr. Wood asserts that he has positive proof that the body is that of his wife, and Dr. Sweetland is just as positive that they are his sister's repositive that they are his sister's remains. Coroner Gillett has tolographed the circumstances to Dr. Sweetland, and Deputy Sheriff King has been sent to bring back the remains. It is feared that legal proceedings will have to be instituted before the body can be recovered.
