THE INTELLIGENCER.

WHEELING, MARCH 5, 1897.

The New Administration.

President McKinley begins his administration by surrounding himself with men whose selection is an earnest of good faith and an augury of success. He heads the list with that tried and true patriot and widely experienced statesman, John Sherman, who has back of him such a career as no other living American can point to.

Mr. Gage is another man of wide experience, but his experience has been in different fields. He is one of the representative business men of the country, and particularly of that class of enterprising business men by which the great west has been developed and built up.

The portfolio of the navy goes to a man of intelligence, dignity and character, who has had wide experience in public affairs. As member of Congress and as governor of his state, Secretary Long took very high rank. No department of the government is of more importance than that of the interior, over which Mr. Bliss is to preside.

President McKinley's Inaugural. The inaugural address of President McKinley is a model production of its kind. Not too long and not too short, it deals in an outspoken, high minded, patriotic way with the great questions of the day, the monetary standard, our circulating medium, the tariff, reciprocity, immigration, arbitration, agriculture, labor and capital.

President McKinley is a partisan of partisans, but as President of the United States he thinks and speaks with a breadth that covers the whole country and the whole people and all the public interests.

It is right here that the public interest centers in the new administration. It is a satisfactory thing for partisans to see their party, headed by their chosen chief, in power; but that is not enough.

Our diplomacy should seek nothing more, and accept nothing less, than in our day. We want no wars of conflict; we must avoid temptation of territorial aggression.

We have been hungry for new territory we have bought it. This doubtless we shall continue to do, except in such a case as that of Hawaii, which we may accept because it is freely tendered to us by people who see their advantage in having some sort of political connection with us.

Apply to Cuba the doctrine laid down by the President and it means that we have no desire to fight Spain in order to acquire Cuba; and it means also that Spain will have to respect the rights of our citizens in her dealings with them in Cuba or elsewhere.

The kindness will not mislead Spain or any other foreign power into taking liberties with us which President McKinley would be quick to resent in the name of the people whose servant he is. This part of the address, we may be sure, reached Madrid about as soon as it did Wheeling, and was read there with very deep interest.

President McKinley intimates to Spain with great politeness that while he is President she will have to behave herself in all matters of direct interest to the United States of America.

More Loans or More Revenue.

Between more loans and more revenue, there ought to be but one opinion. We should have more revenue and that without delay, hindrance, or postponement.

This is well said. It is a business-like view of a business question, and the saying does the President credit. In the good old Republican times we had more revenue. In recent Democratic times we have had more loans.

More revenue means money enough to run the government, and to pay off some of its indebtedness. More loans means not enough money to run the government, and the piling up more of the country's indebtedness.

When the President says that "We should have more revenue and that without delay, hindrance, or postponement," he makes a statement with which every thoughtful man will agree.

There may be differences of opinion as to how more revenue may be raised with the most advantage to the country, but everybody knows that we must have more revenue. The Republican plan is to raise as much as possible through the custom houses, and this of course will be the main feature of the bill.

The Republican party has been able to provide for revenue for the government and protection to American industries. These objects will be sought in the new bill and unless all experience misleads they will be found with benefit to the treasury and the people.

In his treatment of the tariff question President McKinley is very conservative, as he should be, but he abates nothing of his strong convictions on the side of a protective tariff. He would give to his countrymen in their own country the first chance to earn a livelihood.

This is businesslike and American. It is the policy which has done more than any other to build up the country, and give us the industries we have. It is a policy to make a strong people and a strong government, in the best sense of these words.

Advances from Kentucky lead to the expectation that Governor Bradley will presently appoint a United States senator, and follow that appointment by calling the legislature to convene in extra session to elect a senator.

Rival ambitions have got the Republican party in Kentucky in very bad shape, one result of which is that no successor to Senator Blackburn was ready to take his seat yesterday. Whether the party will be in any better condition when the legislature meets in extra session, is of course a question.

Why Governor Bradley would appoint a senator is difficult to understand. Certainly he can have no hope that his appointee would be seated. According to the rule established by the senate it has been held that a vacancy such as now exists in the United States senate from Kentucky is not one which the governor may fill by appointment, the legislature having had full knowledge of such vacancy, having had opportunity to provide for filling it, and having declined so to do.

Under similar circumstances Governor Wilson appointed Judge Lucas a senator from West Virginia, but Judge Lucas was not seated. Legislative bodies sometimes reverse themselves, but enough has come from Washington to make it decidedly improbable that the senate stands ready to reverse itself on this point.

The next day the two men exchanged calls. All this is in keeping with the spirit of the people and of our institutions.

So long as this spirit animates the American people our republic will be in no danger of overturning on account of the intensity of partisan spirit, which is as much characteristic of us as the gentlemanly courtesies exchanged between Mr. Cleveland and Major McKinley.

A Strong Address.

Governor Atkinson's inaugural address has one distinct merit. It is his straight out from the shoulder. He knows what he wants to say and says it so that everybody can understand him. The address, as the governor likes to say of a production of this sort, "has teeth in it."

If Governor Atkinson can prevent it, and he thinks he can, there will be no partisan politics in the educational institutions of West Virginia. On this strong platform the thoughtful people of the state will stand with the governor. He is one of the strong partisans who know where to draw the line.

Governor MacCorkle's brief introduction of his successor was admirable. No utterance of his whole term does him more credit; and the Intelligencer is glad to be able to say in truth that Governor MacCorkle said some good things during his term. He also did some good things; and this, too, is a pleasure to say.

The thrones of Europe may rock on their unstable foundations, but the chair of the President of the United States rests on a solid foundation. That which the people create they respect and will support "with their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor."

It is to be hoped that Governor Atkinson may find as much gratification in his office as his friends find in placing him there. His friends constitute a considerable part of the people of West Virginia.

Those who declared that McKinley could not get even the nomination may now admit that human judgment may err.

If a few of us could not get to Washington we may be sure that we were not missed from that great throng.

The same bright sun shone on Washington and Charleston. It was a great day in both capitals.

War on "Yellow" Journalism.

New York Mail and Express: The addresses incident to the anniversary celebration of the Society for the Suppression of Vice last night, in Carnegie hall, were devoted in large measure to the grooving evil of that caterer to vice and immorality popularly known as the "new journalism."

It is humiliating that the press, the greatest single power for good in the republic, should be included in the necessary labor of organizations banding together for the suppression of vice. Fortunately for the future, however, it has not been left to such forces to assume the initiative in this crusade.

There is nothing to be gained by infernal and unchristian or the withholding of names. The rivalry of the World and Journal in filth has reached a point where to evade is to condone. Last week they were cast out with tongs from the chief public library of the city of Newark.

Then they will cease publication or assume the virtue of decency for self-protection.

REFLECTIONS OF A BACHELOR.

A woman hates to have a tooth filled as much as she does to cut a piece of lace. The best thing in the world to keep a man out of business "schemes" is a wife and babies.

As soon as a bachelor begins to reflect out loud, all the married people he knows get down on him. The average woman would wear a dress made of orange peel, if the dress-maker said it was the fashion.

When a man says he hasn't made up his mind about a thing, it is a sign he has asked his wife about it.

When a man is away on a trip and does something he ought not to, he sits down and writes a nice letter to his wife.—New York Press.

DANGER IN SODA.

Serious Results Sometimes Follow Its Excessive Use. Common soda is all right in its place and indispensable in the kitchen and for cooking and washing purposes, but it was never intended for a medicine, and people who use it as such will some day regret it.

We refer to the common use of soda to relieve heartburn or sour stomach, a habit which thousands of people practice almost daily, and one which is fraught with danger; moreover the soda only gives temporary relief and in the end the stomach trouble gets worse and worse.

The soda acts as a mechanical irritant to the walls of the stomach and bowels and cases are on record where it accumulated in the intestines, causing death by inflammation or peritonitis.

Dr. Harlandson recommends as the safest and surest cure for sour stomach (acid dyspepsia) an excellent preparation sold by druggists under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. These tablets are large twenty grain lozenges, very pleasant to taste and contain the natural acids, pepsin, and other elements essential to good digestion, and when taken after meals they digest the food perfectly and promptly before it has time to ferment, sour and poison the blood and nervous system.

Dr. Wuerth states that he invariably uses Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in all cases of stomach derangements and finds them a certain cure not only for sour stomach, but by promptly digesting the food they create a healthy appetite, increase flesh and strengthen the action of the heart and liver. They are not a cathartic, but intended only to relieve diseases and weaknesses and will be found reliable in any stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50 cents per package. A little book describing all forms of stomach weakness and their cure mailed free by addressing the Stuart Co., 5 Marshall Mich.

Got the Hottest Flue. Satan smiled pleasantly. "When upon earth, you say, you were one of those geniuses who write beautiful pieces for the papers, eh?"

"Ah! and may I inquire what was your non de plume?" "Anonymous!" answered the new-camper, proudly. "Front!" said Satan, sternly; "drop our latest communication in the bottomless waste-basket!"

Something to Know. It may be worth something to know that the very best medicine for restoring the tired out nervous system to a healthy vigor is Electric Bitters. This medicine is purely vegetable, acts by giving tone to the nerve centres in the stomach, gently stimulates the Liver and Kidneys, and for these organs in throwing off impurities in the blood. Electric Bitters improves the appetite, aids digestion, and is pronounced by those who have tried it as the very best blood purifier and nerve tonic. Try it.
