Spain Sues For Peace.

Two important war developments are the features of this morning's news, each of which will attract the attention of the world, and either of which may be regarded as having a direct bearing upon an early ending of the war. The news of the successful landing of General Miles, with his advance expedition, at Guanica, under fire, but without loss, and the raising of Old Glory on Puerto Rican soil, was quickly followed by the unexpected announcement from Washington that Spain had sued for peace formally and directly to President McKinley, through M. Cambon, the French ambassador.

According to the official announcement, Spain makes no distinct proposition, save a request that negotiations for peace be opened. What the result will be cannot now be known, but that the Spanish government has at last been brought to its senses, either as the result of its own desperate situation, or through foreign influences, confirms the predictions which have been frequently made of late. The proposition comes under the only conditions upon which it could be received by the United States, and any negotiations which may be held will be directly between the two governments, through their representatives.

Until President McKinley replies to the Spanish offer to open negotiations, and receives what propositions Spain has to offer, the public cannot know what this country will demand as a peace settlement, but the intimation is plainly made, and it is evidently authoritative, that there will be no departure from the declared purpose of the war.

The United States is in a position to dictate the terms of peace, and we may trust to the wisdom of the administration for a settlement that will be at once consistent with our professions in the declaration of war and our honor as a nation. In the meantime, if the proposition of Spain is accepted, there must necessarily be a cessation of hostilities, until an agreement or disagreement is reached. We may rest assured that if peace comes it will be upon terms which will be satisfactory to the American people.

A Matter for National Pride.

The statement made about Adjutant General Corbin of the progress made in the organization and equipment of the entire army of 261,000 men, within ninety days after the first call for troops, is a vindication of the military department of the government from the wild and inconsiderate criticisms that have been indulged in by a portion of the press. It is stated by the adjutant general that the fact that this great army has been mustered, equipped and placed in the field in so short a time has elicited the surprise and admiration of the best informed authorities of Europe. (What General Corbin says of the personnel of this army has already been proven true, so far as we are able to judge from the work of the volunteers that have been engaged in active work at Santiago. The splendid physical condition of the entire army, and the enthusiastic desire of every regiment to get to the front, indicates that in this respect, also, the character of the army will challenge the admiration of the world. Foreign military experts who were present before Santiago, witnessing the operations and the fighting there, have borne testimony to the remarkable courage and splendid fighting qualities of the volunteers, as well as the splendid work of the regulars. They were astounded at the magnificent conduct of the volunteers who were so fresh from private life, and yet appeared to be born soldiers. Should the war continue these foreign experts may have further opportunity to witness the sort of stuff the American volunteer is made of—certainly it will be afforded in Puerto Rico and at Manila, unless peace is soon declared.

It is a matter for national pride that in so short a time so much has been accomplished in raising such a magnificent army, "physically without a flaw," according to General Corbin, and that of the 216,000 volunteers authorized by Congress, 212,000 have been placed in the field, nearly all fully equipped. They comprise men selected from the flower of the physical manhood of America, and in courage, discipline and patriotism they are not excelled by any military body on this earth. No such body of volunteers ever before enlisted in such a cause for humanity, nor in any country save the United States has there ever been an army more inspired by patriotism. The work of ninety days in the organization of this splendid army, in the face of many obstacles, indicates the splendid resources of this country. It could be more than duplicated in less than ninety days, now that the work has been reduced to a more perfect system.

Red Cross and Spanish Barbarity.

Press dispatches that were received during the attack on Santiago, to the effect that Spanish troops fired upon wounded Americans while they were being conveyed to hospitals on Red Cross litters, are confirmed by a personal letter written by Mrs. John Addison Porter, wife of the President's private secretary, who is with Miss Clara Barton in the relief work in Cuba. As published in yesterday's dispatches, Mrs. Porter cites instances of this character, as well as other instances of barbarity. In contrast with these exhibitions of savagery on the part of the Spaniards, is the relief work which is being conducted by the American Red Cross Society among the Spanish wounded, and the care that is being taken of them by the American authorities, which Mrs. Porter describes. She also declares that these Spanish wounded express gratitude that they are given the same attention that is being given to the American wounded.

The statement in Mrs. Porter's letter which will cause the greatest surprise and horror, in connection with the barbarous attacks on our wounded by the Spanish sharpshooters, or, more properly speaking, guerrillas, is to the effect that commissions authorizing this dastardly and cowardly work were found upon the bodies of some of the guerrillas after they were killed in the fighting. The cruel work was not alone confined to firing on the wounded, but upon the surgeons attending them.

These facts, coming direct from the field of Red Cross operations, and from one of the heroic women who have risked so much to engage in the mission of mercy, and not from sensational news sources, indicate that the guerrillas guilty of the inhuman conduct referred to were not acting on their own notion or responsibility, but were actually commissioned for the miserable business by officers in authority—officers of the Spanish government, which is continually boasting before the world of its alleged honor. It is indeed a magnificent Nation that repays such an enemy by a humane treatment of its wounded and a generous care for its soldiers that have become prisoners of war.

In the conduct of this war, on every hand and in every movement, the United States is consistently and honorably carrying out its declaration that it is prosecuting a war in the interest of humanity and civilization. This fact is being impressed upon the people of other nations, quite as strongly as the splendid deeds of courage and the efficiency of the army and navy are winning the admiration of the naval and military authorities of other governments.

Hereafter the American flag, wherever it shall be greeted in any part of the civilized world, will be hailed, not only as the emblem of a great republic, strong in its own resources, but as the standard of a brave, generous Nation, which, though slow to war, but being driven to it by the instincts of humanity, does not forget the obligations it has assumed in its prosecution. And beside that standard will float the flag of the American branch of the Red Cross, which has responded to Spanish barbarity, and violations of international agreements, and disrespect for what its emblem signifies, with noble deeds of charity.

Some Misrepresentations.

The dispatch from Madrid gravely announcing that the Spanish authorities in Cuba will arrange with Gomez, the Cuban leader, to espouse the Spanish cause against the United States, indicates the extremity of absurdity to which the Spanish cause is going to bolster up its miserable cause. At this stage of the game it is useless for the Madrid statesmen to persist in their falsehood. The whole world is already disgusted with their systematic lying about the Cuban situation. The fact is that Gomez is working in harmony with the Americans, and has stated his entire willingness to leave all matters, so far as the Cubans are concerned to President McKinley.

In this same connection, the more information received from Santiago concerning the conduct of the troops under Garcia, the more apparent it is that the statements concerning their alleged "worthlessness" were false, and evidently the work of prejudiced sensational newspaper correspondents. Letters from American officers and private soldiers at Santiago, and the testimony of wounded Americans who have been returned to this country, all testify to good fighting by Garcia's men, and their value as scouts and sharpshooters. Unfortunately, the misrepresentations of the Cuban insurgent force, which is now better organized through American assistance, has not come from Spain, but from American correspondents, while, in some cases, complaints about hangers on about the camps have been misunderstood by the public as referring to the insurgent troops.

The Starving Innocents.

The good people of this country will hope that it is not altogether true that it will be impossible to grant the pitiful appeal from the starving Cubans of Cienfuegos, addressed to Admiral Sampson, until that place is captured. And yet it is difficult to see how else relief can be afforded to the five thousand old men, women and children who are said to be starving in that city, and whose fathers, sons and brothers are in the insurgent army. Their experience is similar to that of thousands of others in various parts of the island, and from whom similar cries for succor are coming to our authorities. It is pitiful to contemplate that thousands of deaths from starvation must be added to the already long list before peace can come and relief can be generally distributed.

Fortunately the situation is such that peace may not now be long delayed. Then the awful tragedy of four years will be over, and such pictures as this terrible one drawn of the conditions in Cienfuegos will give place to that of a great and prosperous Nation lifting from the depths of despair and the horrors of starvation the innocent victims of the brutality and savagery of a nation which still clings to the semi-barbaric method of warfare of centuries ago.

No one should worry about Miles nor be anxious concerning the success of the Porto Rican campaign. The force which he will have will make Porto Rico American property within a very short time. It will contribute a powerful amount to the peace fund of victories our brave heroes are accumulating on land and sea.

A contemporary's headline over a war dispatch reads: "Miles' First Act Will be to Beize a Base." As the Spaniards in Puerto Rico probably know more about bull fighting than they do about the great American game, it should be explained to them that seizing a base is always applauded by the boys on the bleachers.

THE BABIES DID IT

How a Surly Conductor was Induced to Get Married.

New York Times: "Well, well; look here; how's this, how's this?" said the regular passenger to the surly car conductor. "I'm sure I saw you give that pretty girl a squeeze as you helped her out of the car—" "It might be, sir," interrupted the surly conductor, with a face beaming with smiles, "you see she's my wife—" "Why, you dog, you—and you acknowledge it, do you?" went on the regular passenger. "You're the man that wouldn't have a woman on your car if you could help it; hated the whole lot of 'em, did you? Thought they were only put into the world to make trouble—" "But you see, sir—the conductor was still beaming.

"Always gave you pennies; they could not get in or out of the car alone; never knew where they were going; if they did get off alone they got on wrong and tumbled. Crowded into seats that were full; you never knew it to fall. That's what you said; that's what you said. And here I find you—" "Yes, sir, you're right, sir—step lively, madam—but you see—" "Squeezing a pretty girl, and a very pretty girl at that—" "My wife, sir—transfer, madam?—" "And your wife into the bargain! And you hated the whole lot of 'em. Said it pretty near ruined a man to have 'em on the car; didn't know what would happen if you had one belonging to you. And now you're married! Bless me! Dear, dear!"

"Never saw you smile at one of 'em unless it was a very little one. You were sweet on the babies; yes, I must say you were that—" "Yes, sir, you're right, sir. Perhaps it was that that did it. You see this is a family line, sir. Lots of nice babies on this line, sir. It made a man think he might like to have a little home of his own, sir. You see there was—" "Yes, I see, I see; the pretty girl. Well, well, I declare! And you look like another man. Any babies of your own?"

"No, sir; ain't but just over the honey-moon yet, sir—" "Well, well! You don't see? Well, you just ring that bell, young man, and let me out, and there's a dollar as a nest egg for the first baby. Well, well, I do declare! What's this world coming to any way?"

The Spanish Milled Dollar.

Philadelphia Times: One result of the destruction of Spain as a maritime and commercial power must be the end of all attempts to revive the Spanish dollar as a standard of commercial value. When the government of the United States was formed, the influence of Spain in the world at large and particularly in this hemisphere was so great as to give a commanding position to Spanish money and our first Congress adopted the dollar as the unit of our coinage, "each to be of the value of a Spanish milled dollar as the same is now current in Spain." Even the senators from the silver states that once were Spanish territory do not now care to recall the origin of their idol.

Fortunately, it was not the coin that was adopted as our standard, but its value as exactly as possible to be that of 24.75 grains of pure gold. Thus we put ourselves in clear relation with the commercial world, and while the Spanish dollar gradually retired to the Spanish colonies, we have kept, with the slight adjustment suggested by experience, and have still the good American dollar that is going to supplant the discredited old silver cartwheel in the colonies we have to redeem from the stupidity of a nation that has been incapable of learning. We shall never turn back to the Spanish dollar again.
