Emperor's Visit to England Does Not Appeal to Popular Favor.

SYMPATHIES ARE WITH BOERS.

As Evidenced by the Large Subscriptions for Wounded Boers—German Press Thinks the Outcome Uncertain—Afraid of American Meas.

(Special Associated Press Cable to The Intelligencer.)

BERLIN, Nov. 18.—The reassembling of the Reichstag Tuesday caused hardly a ripple on the surface of political life. It seems that neither the Reichstag nor the government is anxious for a conflict over the pending measures concerning which there is much heated difference of opinion. It was different with the emperor's departure for England, which probably nine-tenths of the nation condemn. Since it has been generally known that the visit would take place, the press of every shade of opinion, which had been unrestrainedly abusing Great Britain and grandiloquently pooh-poohing the notion of his majesty going there, has become more cautious and now some of the papers even speak approvingly of the visit. This does not alter the fact that the people are still overwhelmingly against the visit and against Great Britain in the matter of the war. The inspired press is trying hard to convince its readers that the visit is purely personal and totally devoid of political meaning. The Tageblatt remarks:

"Even if the emperor is forced to talk politics, he will have the faithful Von Bülow along who will know how to confine the conversation to the proper narrow limits."

This, however, is said to be all nonsense as neither the emperor, Van Bülow nor the foreign office is at all Anglophobe, because of the war. Official reports received during the past two years have changed considerably not only the emperor's opinion about the Boers and their government, but also that of the foreign office. It is doubted that either the emperor or his government had in mind at any time during the past three months to interfere in South Africa for the benefit of the Boers. Unquestionably his majesty's visit to Great Britain is undertaken largely for political reasons and is distinctly meant as a friendly act. If this is still cloaked and hidden from the German public it is only in deference to the violence of the anti-British sentiment throughout the empire. The Vorwärts ironically says:

"That the grandson feels the need of visiting his grandmother just at the time when she must feel deeply hurt by the provocative and ill-managed war-like enterprise, is but natural."

Conversing with a prominent diplomat of this topic, the latter said to the correspondent of the Associated Press: "It is a fact well known to all the diplomatic corps and the various cabinets of Europe that Germany, having recently met several distinct checks from France on occasions favorable to make common cause against the common enemy, England has, of necessity, had to turn to England. This is so patent to any one who has studied the events of the last fifteen months that it is folly to pretend that Germany is backward in seeking an entente with England. It is well known that the emperor is vexed with the people's unresonable spite against England, and this sentiment is shared by his advisers."

SCHOOL MELANGE.

It seems that there is no likelihood of the compulsory school law being enforced in Wheeling, or that we are even to have a law to take charge of truancy. The writer would then suggest to our board of education to have at least one room in every school for those pupils who from any cause whatever have fallen behind their classes. In this room should be placed a teacher well qualified for the work of drilling such pupils in anything and everything in which they are deficient. This teacher should be one able to inspire to better work. It should be considered no disgrace to be a pupil of this room for many pupils fall behind their classes from no fault of their own. Some are compelled to stay away a part of the year, and when they return they find themselves unable to take their places in the class of which they were members. This often discourages them, and they quit school entirely. In nearly all cities such classes are being established, and wherever tried the very best reports come from them. It would surely be worth the trial in the Wheeling schools. These lines were suggested by a pupil returning to school after an absence of more than a year. He wished to be placed as far ahead as possible. One of the problems of today is to keep our boys in school, because they cannot, on account of being forced to be absent a part of the year, or with the class with which they commenced their school life. The plan suggested would remedy this to a great extent. It would surely be worth the trying, at least. Think of it.

Is the eyesight of our children being injured in school? This is a subject that demands the most careful attention of both parent and pupil. While it may be true that the eyesight of some is injured at school, many more suffer from defective eyesight on account of the manner in which they are used at home. Especially in sitting up to read long after they should be in bed. When ever any one gets "that tired feeling" in the eyes he should quit using them until they are rested, and to do this generally requires about eight hours of good solid sleep. A German professor who has made it a study says that in the German primary schools about six pupils in every hundred have defective eyesight. In the intermediate about ten per cent have something the matter with their eyes. In the high schools the number reaches from twenty to twenty-five per cent, while in the universities about sixty in every hundred have "myopia," or short-sightedness. If this is true, it looks as if our schools have something to do with the matter. If teachers take the proper care to see that the book is held a certain distance from the eyes, and that the light of the school room is properly regulated much of this can be avoided.

It is not the purpose of these notes to criticize teachers or teaching, recognizing the fact that we are all erring mortals, and are very liable to make mistakes; but when the pouring in of news and the striving for high per cents is being pained off as teaching, then the Pedagogue feels it his duty to enter a solemn protest. When a pupil is forced to answer in the exact words of the text book, and must receive no credit for the text book, and when no other answer is taken as correct, then it is time for all who love humanity to protest. But you ask, are these such teachers? There are, and they can be discovered with the naked eye, not a thousand miles from the city of Wheeling. There are still in the profession too many who are there for the money there is in it, though they have no love for the money. The calling is getting to be a very respectable one, and there are almost ten applicants for every vacancy that occurs. Remember, the writer is not objecting to the money received for the work; he only wishes that every true teacher could get more, but he does emphatically enter his earnest protest against the employment of those who teach for money alone, and not for the good they can do. He would also protest against the employment of those who have had no previous preparation for the work, i. e., have no knowledge for the mind, or the process of its development. The knowledge of the subjects to be taught is necessary, but of far more value to teacher is the knowledge of how to teach them. One great need of our Wheeling schools is a training course for the teachers, which all should attend before applying for a position in our schools.

Some parents complain of the regulations concerning those pupils having contagious diseases. In Pennsylvania there is an act of the legislature which prohibits a child in any home from entering school for thirty days after the complete recovery of the person who may have scarlet fever, diphtheria, diptheritic croup, etc., and then an admitted only on the certificate of the attending physician that such person has been free from the disease thirty days. This prohibition includes all members of the family or household where the disease exists. If our regulations were as strict as these there should be no complaint, for the sole object is to stop the spread of these dread diseases, and all should be glad to cooperate with the health officer and the attending physician in their efforts to do so.

Col. Francis W. Parker, the great leader in what a few years ago was called the "New Education," has taken another advanced step on the same line. In an address delivered in Boston a few days ago on the subject "The Ideals in Education," he said: "It is not my purpose to attack the past and its mighty work, but to show that out of the past may grow something higher and grander. The first thing that we want for our children is that they shall have robust, healthy and vigorous bodies; then, that they shall be helpful, trustworthy, cheerful and possessed of good taste; that they shall have the capacity to work into which they shall put all their energies, and feel that their life is for the good of others, and above all that they shall become good citizens. A citizen is one who makes the highest thing in all the world his ideal, while the essential in vocation is the quality of work done, the highest inspiration to quality being helpfulness."

In the same lecture Col. Parker questioned whether there is an institution in the land in which a child can find its true vocation, or that trains children into true citizenship. These things are not what they ought to be. It behooves both teachers and parents to lend a helping hand to make them what they should be.

The Pedagogue tips his hat to the new commissioner of Ritchie district. Dr. Armbricht is a graduate of the school, stands high in his profession and is one of the very best citizens of the ward. He knows the needs of a school, and it is but saying what all who know him will say when it is suggested that he will make a model school commissioner. In the Ritchie district is not slow to take a good thing when it sees it. The selection of Mr. Schaub to take the place of Mr. McNash, deceased, could not have been better. While there may be just as good commissioners in the board of education, but there is no better.

The regular monthly meeting of the A. B. and grammar teachers of Ritchie school was held in the office of the principal at 3 o'clock Friday afternoon. Superintendent Anderson was present, and talked on the importance of the teachers knowing more than they teach, and he also emphasized the importance of keeping abreast of the times in everything pertaining to events transpiring around us. Above all, though, he urged that there should be good discipline in the school room. His talk was greatly enjoyed. THE PEDAGOGUE.

OF LOCAL INTEREST.

Some People We Know and We Will Profit by Hearing About Them. This is a purely local event. It took place in Wheeling. Not in Buffalo or New York. You are asked to investigate it. Asked to believe a citizen's word. To confirm a citizen's statement. Any article that is intended at home, or obtains resident advocates, is more worthy of confidence than a far-off foreign article. Testified to by unknown people. Mrs. C. Munzmaier, of Fourteenth street, says: "It is the same old story, severe pains through the small of the back just over the kidneys and a distressing and annoying urinary weakness. My back was so sore at times that I could scarcely get around to do my work and were I to sit in one position for a time it was very painful to straighten. I tried different things, but did not get any better, when I was recommended to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I got them at the Logan Drug Company and began to use them. I never had anything act so quickly and satisfactorily. I took a few doses when I felt decidedly better. In time my troubles disappeared."

The flames swept the entire square on West Main street to Madison street. Some twenty stores and buildings were destroyed entailing a loss of $75,000. The amount of insurance and the cause of the fire is not known.

Amateur Photography.

The worst mistake the amateur makes is in the beginning by making pictures freely for his friends and without making them pay for them. In the beginning you may escape easily but just wait until you attain some degree of efficiency and you will perceive a difference. I made the mistake. The result of which was that I soon had no opportunity to make any pictures I really wanted, but instead was making "portraits" of all the babies in the neighborhood, says the Boston Journal.

When I computed the cost I cut it off short, and have since made my camera nearly pay its way. Besides I now have a little chance on my summer vacation to make a picture for my own pleasure, rather than for the purpose of satisfying a casual acquaintance.

Don't be squeamish about selling your pictures. It is hard to begin to demand payment, but it is all right when your friends get used to it. Besides, when your 1,000 odd dear friends swoop down and invite you to "take the dearest little baby in the world" you will be happy that you established the rule, which will save yourself the loss of a good deal of patience and many spoiled plates.

And after all it is the middle class financially, who make the pictures. The millionaires are too lazy and the day workers too busy. As the middle class has no money to burn, I consider it all right to make your camera pay for your material. If you are not a millionaire there's no use trying to play you are. I know Strattons by the hundred, but there's only one Winfield Scott in the crowd.

I have a rule to follow in all cases. If I ask anyone to pose for a picture I give him one copy of the picture. If he wants more he pays for them. If he asks me to make the picture, he pays for all he gets.

Study your landscape before you take the picture. It is less trouble, takes less time and costs less than to waste regrets over a poorly composed photograph. Train the eye to see the picture as the camera will see it.

Careful work is the key to photographic success. Every photo outfit should include brains.

Printing on silk is a simple process, and is done through the medium of the following solution: Boiling water.....40 ounces Chloride of ammonium.....50 grains Iceland moss.....30 grains

When nearly cold filter and immerse the silk for fifteen minutes, then hang up to dry. Sanitize for fifteen minutes in an acid twenty grains silver bath. Dry and iron. Print in sunlight and tone in the following bath: Water.....20 ounces Acetate of soda.....3 drachms Chloride of gold.....3 grains

The printing should be carried rather deeper than usual.

It is very difficult to tell a beginner what to photograph, and very easy to tell him where he made mistakes after he has made a picture. My advice would be, never be in a hurry. Study your subject, says the Boston Journal. Study the work of others and profit by their failures. Make notes of the conditions under which you made your negative, so that you can successfully repeat the operation when you have made a good negative, as often happens right from the start, carefully preserve it by placing it in a paper bag, which all dealers have for that purpose. Make a good print from it and place the print in an album. Albums of endless variety can be had cheap, and when you want to refer to that photograph, or show it to a friend, you do not have to search all over creation to find it. Be careful in all matters of detail, and be every ready to use your camera. To do this, as soon as your holders are empty, fill them up. If you are out of plates, get them before you need them. See to it that you have developer and hypo on hand, and whatever else may be needed. When mounting prints, be careful to have them trimmed square, that is, an even, clean cut margin all around. If you have to do any fixing up on a negative, do it at once, and when bright weather comes you are ready to print.
