MY CAVE-LIFE IN VICESBURG.

By the Wife of a Confederate Officer. During the siege of Vicksburg many of taking shelter during the frequent bombardments in cayes or cellars dug for that tle volume whose title appears above gives some graphic pictures of this strange and perilous life. It is written by a woman o culture and refinement, who, though South. era in her connections and sympathies, shows none of the bitterness of the parti san, but records whatever of generous and peroic on either side has met her womanly eyes. She thus speaks of the tomb-like places of shelter to which many weeks the romen and children were confined :-

"Caves were the fashion—the rage—over besieged Vicksburg. Negroes, who under-stood their business, hired themselves out to dig them, at from thirty to fifty dollars, ccording to the size. Many persons, considering different localities unsale, would sell them to others, who had been less forsent teem to others, who had been less for-tunate, or less provident; and so great was the demand for cave workmen, that a new branch of industry sprang up and became popular—particularly as the personal safe-ty of the workmen was secured, and money withel? "Some families had light bread made in large quantities, and subsisted on it with milk (provided their cows were not killed from one milking time to another.) without any more cooking, until called on to replen-ish. Though most of us lived on core bread and bacon, served three times a day, the only luxury of the meal consisting in its warmth, I had some flour, and frequently had some hard, tough biscuit made from it, there be-ing no sods or yeast to be procured. At this time we could, also, procure heaf. A this time we could, also, procure beef. A gentleman friend was kind enough to offer me his camp bed, a narrow spring mattress, which fitted within the contracted cave which fitted within the contracted cave very comfortably; another had his tent fly stretched over the mouth of our residence to shield us from the suo; and thus I was the recipient of many favors, and under obligations to many gentlemen of the army for delicate and kind attentions; and, in looking back to my trials at that time, I shall ever remember with gratitude the kindness with which they strove to ward off every deprivation. And so I went regularly to work, keeping house under ground. Our new habitation was an excavation made in the earth, and branching it feet from the entrance forming a new six feet from the entrance, forming a cave in the shape of a T. In one of the wings my bed fitted; the other I used as a kind of my bed fitted; the other I used as a kind of dressing room; in this the earth bad been cut down a foot or two below the floor of the main cave; I could stand erect here; and when tired of sitting in other portions of my essidence, I bowed myself into it, and stood impassively recting at full high, ease of the variations is the till hell, expectant life. Our quar-ters were close, indeed; yet I was more comfortable than I expected I could have been made under the earth in that fashion. We were safe at least from fragments of abell—and they were flying in all direc-tions; though no one seemed to think our cave any protection should a mortar shell happen to fall directly on top of the ground above ns. We had our roof arched and above us. We had our roof arched and braced, the supports of the bracing taking up much room in our confined quarters.— The earth was about five feet thick above, and seemed hard and compact; yet, poor M.—, every time he came io, examined it, fearing amid some of the shocks it sussained, that it might crack and fall in upon

The danger was by no means imaginary; in various lastances these cavernous cells collapsed, either from the jar or constant burying their inmates in a premature grave. The cave was but a choice of evils. he peril within being only less than the peril without. On one occasion a servant

"it was about four o'clock, one Wednes-day evening—the shelling during the day had gone on about as usual—I was read-ing in safety, I imagined, when the unmis-takable whirring of Parrot abells told us that the battery we so much feared had opened from the intrenchments. I ran to the entrance to call the servants in; and immediately after they entered a shell immediately after they entered, a shell struck the earth a few feet from the enstruck the earth a few feet from the en-trance, burying itself without exploding. I ran to the little dressing room, and could hear them striking around us on all sides. I crouched closely against the wall, for I did not know at what moment one might strike within the cave. A man came in much frightened, and asked to remain un-til the danger was over. The servants much frightened, and asked to remain untit the danger was over. The servants

Here is another of those terrible incidents for which the siege will be recalled with a shudder by its participants, while life and memory last:

life and memory last:

"A soldier, named Heary, had noticed my little girl often, bringing her flowers at one time, an apple at another, and again a young mooking bird, and had attached her to him much by these little kindusses.—
Frequently, on seeing him pass, she would call his name, and clap her hands gleefully as he rode the general's handsome horse for water, causing him to prance past the cave for her amusement. She called my attention to him one morning, saying: "O attention to him one morolog, saying: 'O mamma, look at Henuy's horse how he plays!' He was riding a small black horse that was exceedingly wild, and striving to accustom it to the rapid evolutions of the accustom it to the rapid evolutions of the Texas troops, tarning in his saddle to grasp something from the ground, as he moved speedily on. Soon after, he rode the horse for water; and I saw him return and fasten it to a tree. Afterward I saw him coming down the hill opposite, with an unexploded shrapnell shell in his hand. In a few moments I heard a quick explosion in the ments I heard a quick explosion in the ravine, followed by a cry—a sudden, ago-nized cry. I ran to the entrance, and saw a courier, whom I had noticed frequently passing by, roll slowly over into the rivu-let of the ravine and lie motionless at a little distance. Henry—oh nour Henry! little distance: Henry-ob, poor Henryl-holding out his mangled arms-the bands holding out his mangled arms—the hands torn and hanging from the bleeding, ghastly wrist—a learful wound in his head—the blood pouring from his weaded. Shot, gasping, wild, he stargered around, crying piteonally, 'Where are you, boys!—O-boys, where are some to me! God have mercy! Allighty God, have mercy! My little girl clust to you the more set a mark apon it, from the first. What is the use of said hasty attempts thilled! Now be'll die, mamma. Oh, poor Henny!' I carried her away from that painful sight. Henry died that night, sill unconscious of the sorrowful comrades around his bed—still calling on God to Henny! I carried her away from that painful sight. Henry died that oight, sill unconscious of the sorrowful comrades around his bed—still calling on God to pity him. After the bodies of the wounded men had been carried away, we heard loud wallings and cries in the direction of the city. I was told a negro woman, in walk-ing through the ward, had hern struck here. city. I was told a negro woman, in walk-ing through the yard, had been struck by a fragment of shell, and instantly killed. The screams of the women of Vicksburg were the saddest I have ever heard. The wallings over the dead seemed full of-a ceart sick sgooy. I channet titempt to deteribe the thrill of pity, mingled with fear, become down and the saddest with the company of the saddest with the saddest that pierced my soul, as suddenly vibrating through the air would come these sorrowful shricks!-these pitiful mosus!-someful shrieks!—these pitiful mosus!—some-times almost simultanequely with the ex-plosion of a shell. This anguish over the dead and wounded was particularly low and mouroful, perhaps from the depres-sion. Many women were utterly sick through constant fear and apprehension. It is atrange that the ladies were almost constantly in caves, and yet, did one go out for a short time, she was almost cer-tain to be wounded; while the officers and

At another time a more imminent dan ger measced the cave and sil it contained:

"It was about four o'clock, one Wednesday evening—the shelling during the day in the midst of the firing, when he seagerly described in the midst of the firing, when he seagerly drank from the heroic soldier's canteen.

"Already the men in the rifle pits were on half rations—flour or meal enough to furnish bread equivalent in quantity to two biscuit in two days; many of them two biscuits in two days; many of them ate it all at once, and the next day insted, preferring, as they said, to have one good meal. So, they sat gramped up all day in the pits—their rations cooked in the valley and brought to them—scarcely daring to change their position and stand erect, for the lederal sharpshooters were watching; for the heads; and to rise above the breastworks was almost certain death. Prequently, a Parrott shell would penetrate the intrenchments, and, exploding, cause frightful wounds, and death most frequently. "Ah!" said M.—, one day, "te's to the noble mea in the rile pits that Vicksburg will owe aught of honor she may gain in this siege. I revere them, as I see them undergoing every privation with courage and patience, anxious only for the high reputation of the city." They amused centre of the cave before us all, lying there smoking. Our eyes were fastened upon it, while we expected every moment, the terrific explosion would ease. I pressed my child closer to my beart, and drew nearer to the wall. Our fate seemed almost certain. The poor man who had most certain. The poor man who had sought refuge within was most exposed of all. With a sudden impulse, I seized a large double blanket that lay mear, and gave it to him for the purpose of shielding him from the fragments; and thus we remained for a component, with surely served in exit of the missing of death, when it is not a set of the missing of death, when PROFESSIONS A CO., I Jackson & Co., I PROFESSIONS.

After the surrendes, the old graybended soldier, in passing on the bill near the cave, stopped, and, touching his hat, said: 'It's a sad day this madam, I little thought we'd come to it, when we first stopped in the intrenchments. I hope you'll yet be happy, madam, after all the trouble you've seen.' To which I mentally responded, 'Ameo.' The poor, hunchback soldier, who had been sick, and who, at soldier, who had been sick, and who, at home in southern Missouri, is worth a mil lion of dollars, I have been told, yet within Vicksburg has been nearly starved, walked out to day in the pleasant air, for the first time for many days."

And so the proud city was ours at last, and the details of this memorable siege are but stories of the past, materials for legend and song.

From the New York Post. The Virginia Constitutional Convention.

This body, which has been in session for some time past in Alexandria, has just ad journed, giving much offence by its refusal to submit its work to the people. Under the circumstances this refusal annears to or sourcem-stances this refusal appears to use but natural; there is just now no "people" to refer it to; the whole State, with the exception of a few counties on the Potomac, and Northampton and Accomac, separated from the rest of Virginia by the width of the Cheanpeake bay, is either in the grange, bands or debatable ground. the enemy's bands, or debatable ground across which guerrillas sweep, and where armies may fight any day. To submit a Constitution and ordinances to the votes of these counties and a few scattered pre cincts, would be ridiculous.

But what was the Convention itself?—
Did that represent in any way the mass of the people of the State? Was it a body so which called itself a Virginia State Convention has authority to commit the State to any course. So in Louisiana, the interference of the military arm which commanded an election deprived that election of the moral force of an act of the people. It was widely different in Arkansas, where the people acted without a hint from the military power, without the interference of the general government, and even without considiring with it. There the State was really cleared of rebel armits; only predatory guerrilla bands roamed here and there, and rothed secessionists as well as Union men. The people of the State, after due notice, met and chose a convention for the express purpose of re establishing civil government and returning the State formally and by solemn act to its due allegiance and place in the Union; the greater part of the people of the State voted; the sion. Many women were utterly sick through constant fear and apprehension. It is strange that the ladies were almost constantly in caves, and yet, did one go out for a short time, she was almost certain to be wounded; while the officers and soldiers rode and walked about, with very little destruction of life ensuing."

In these pages are touching exhibitions both of endurance and bravery, which lead us to respect many of the defenders of the proper form at the State capital, and its proceedings were approved by an open vote of the people. No one could object to these acts; they had the moral force of acts of the people with the moral force of acts of the people both of endurance and bravery, which lead us to respect many of the defenders of Vicksburg as "foemen worthy of our steel." It is a pleaseure to record incidents like the following:

"A federal soldier left on the field, badly wounded in the leg, had begged most pit. country till the loyal people of a State ar prepared to reassume the power and rights of which they were deprived by the rebel
