Rev. John Lowrle Wilson, the newly installed paster of the Presbyterian church at Abbeville village, is the third son of Rev. James Wilson, late missionary to India. He was born on the banks of the Ganges. At the breaking out of the war he was a student at what is now known as the Southwestern 1868: dismissed April 15, 1876, to church in the breaking out of the war he was a student at what is now known as the Southwestern Presbyterian University, at Clarksville, Tennessec. He hald aside his text books and shouldered a musket, entering the army as a private soldier, but was afterward promoted to third Lieutenant. He was with his command every time it was under fire until the battle of Brury's Bluff on the 16th of May, 1864, when he received three serious wounds:

TIES THAT BIND.

Since the withdrawal of the Abbeville portion of Upper Long Cane church, each church has had a separate preacher, and in one respectative are as distinct as possible, but in another, they are more closely allied than twin sisters. Whatever feeling may have existed at the time of the secession of the Abbeville church has long since died out, and there will church has long since died out, and there is between these secession of the Abbeville church has long since died out, and there is between these secession of the Abbeville church has long since died out, and there mond, on certificate, 8 July 1865; dismissed to disted at the time of the secession of the Abbeville church has long since died out, and there is between them an intimacy and a friend-ship which perhaps does not exist between the members of ally other distinct congregations. By all the ties that bind men together they had been united for a hundred years. They had met together all their lives, and they and their fathers had dwelt together in harmony and unity; they worshipped the same Lord by the same profession of faith and in the same sanctuary. They were of one fiesh and one blood. They had a common grave yard, and the forefathers of the Abbeville church sleep their last sleep beside the graves of the forefathers of the Upper Long Cane church. Upon this sacred spot all differences of opinion are adjusted, and the tenderest-sympathies are ever awakened when a family of either church is afflicted.
