DYNAMITE DISASTER.

Frightful Explosion of Blasting Powder on the Hudson.

A Car Containing Thirty Laborers Blown to Atoms.

A flat car loaded with dynamite and drawn by a construction engine was blown to atoms shortly before noon a few days ago, at a place about one and a quarter miles south of Tarrytown, N. Y., on the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad.

A gang of workmen, chiefly Italians, were on the car, and of the number thirteen were killed, ten were injured and five, on the day after the tragedy, were missing. It was thought that the bodies of the latter were thrown into the river. Efforts were made to recover them. The bodies of several of the dead Italians have neither been identified nor identified. Some of the injured of the same nativity have been recognized. Three of the wounded were taken to a local hospital at Tarrytown; the rest were brought to the city and taken to a hospital in New York City, where they are being properly cared for.

Had the explosion occurred while a heavily loaded passenger train was passing the work train the loss of life might have been still more appalling. No trustworthy information was obtainable the day following the accident as to the direct cause of the explosion. The most intelligent theory advanced, however, is that the exploding cartridges were carelessly loaded with the dynamite cartridges, and that in some inexplicable way one or more of these caps was ignited, causing the explosion.

As the train was back was torn up and traffic on the road was temporarily suspended. No damage resulted to surrounding property beyond the breaking of a few panes of glass, though the shock of the explosion was felt for a mile or more from the scene on both sides of the river.

Following is a list of the dead: John McCarthy, timekeeper, twenty-two years old, North Tarrytown; Frank More, water-boy, eighteen, Tarrytown, blown into the river; John Smith, brakeman, thirty-two, Sing Sing, blown into the river; Lucio Rainiere, laborer, thirty-two, Tarrytown, killed by the explosion; seven Italians, names unknown, thrown in all directions and badly hurt, but not much mutilated.

The train consisted merely of an engine, driven by Frank More, and a flat car, in the charge of John Connors, conductor. On the car were twenty-four cases of Ajax powder, loaded at Ludlow's, and intended for use in the construction of the new bridge.

About thirty men were aboard, mostly Italians, who were to do the work. Besides Connors and the Italian drivers were J. Smith, the brakeman; Edward Finnegan, the fireman; and George E. Scoville, the water-boy. At Hope's Point the road makes a sharp bend and a flagman is stationed there, where he can watch the track in both directions.

"Gus" was the name of the man who was watching the train as it approached him, when he saw an Italian jump off. The man struck on his head and was thrown some distance on the rebound.

The train ran toward the Italian. Before he could reach him while the train was scarcely 100 feet away he heard a terrific explosion. Looking back, he saw a flash of light with a bang, and flying debris of all kinds. The powder had in some way ignited, and the car, engine, tender, passengers, and even the roadbed, were blown several hundred feet in all directions.

The flash of light was plainly seen from the station at Tarrytown, about one mile distant, and Officer Smith, who was on duty there, John A. Laut, editor, David Whalen, a brakeman, and a hundred other men who had been on the train, saw the roadbed blown out for a distance of twenty or twenty-five feet, rails twisted into all sorts of shapes, the car almost completely annihilated, and the bodies of the victims scattered all about.

Five minutes after the explosion the smoke cleared away. At least it had all blown out and the bodies of the dead and injured were scattered all about. The bodies of the dead were scattered all about. The bodies of the dead were scattered all about.

Some of the wounded were lying on the ground, some were being carried to the hospital. The bodies of the dead were scattered all about.

Only a bit of the engine was left. The rest had been blown to pieces. The bodies of the dead were scattered all about.

The ties for the length of two rails were missing. There was a hole fifteen feet across in the ground where they had been. The engine and tender were blown to pieces. The bodies of the dead were scattered all about.

A piece of wheel was fast to the end of it. The cab of the engine had been torn off and had disappeared entirely. The smoke stack and boiler were blown to pieces. The bodies of the dead were scattered all about.

The machinery that remained intact was the safety valve with the impaled man. Two telegraph poles had been knocked over into Hoe's Pond, and the wires dangled in the water. The fence which had separated the pond from the road was missing for 200 feet. The river and the pond were full of floating debris.

PLUCKY QUEEN NATALIE. She is Dragged From Her Home by the Servian Government. The Prefect of Belgrade, Servia, was charged by the Regents with the duty of expelling ex-Queen Natalie from Servian territory, went to the latter's residence the other day, and in spite of her earnest protests compelled her to enter a carriage, which drove toward the quay on the Danube where the royal yacht was moored.

The news that the ex-Queen was really on her way to Belgrade, in the boat named Hine, spread throughout Belgrade and excited the students' quarters. The latter promptly turned out in force, and as the carriage containing the unhappy lady was being lowered into the Danube, it was surrounded by a crowd of students who seized the horses' heads, brought the vehicle to a standstill and loudly cheered the royal prisoner. The students then detached the horses from the carriage and dragged the ex-Queen, who remained seated in the Prefect's conveyance, back to her residence, cheering loudly as they passed through the streets.

The Prefect, assisted by a force of gendarmes, tried in vain to regain possession of the ex-Queen, but the students ordered her to her residence in spite of all the efforts made to prevent them. On their way there, however, several collisions took place between the gendarmes and the students, but the latter came off victorious.

The citizens and merchants generally sided with the ex-Queen. The residence of Natalie is defended by students. Intense excitement prevails. A conflict occurred that afternoon, the troops firing upon the Queen's supporters, killing two and wounding many others.

TERRIFIC TORNADO.

Many Lives Destroyed in a Missouri Storm.

Houses Demolished and the Inmates Killed.

A terrific tornado passed three miles northwest of Mexico, Mo., at 3 o'clock on a recent afternoon in the vicinity of Bean Creek. Fifteen houses in the vicinity of that place were destroyed, some ten or twelve persons killed, an equal number fatally injured, and a large number badly hurt.

At the house of a farmer named Duffy, John Dorgan and family were living. James Dorgan, aged six, was killed outright. Lizzie Dorgan was fatally hurt and died in a few minutes. Her skull was crushed and a large piece of timber penetrated her side. Mrs. Dorgan was crushed to death by falling timbers, and Mr. Dorgan was fatally injured. The house was entirely swept away. Nothing was heard of Mr. Duffy, and it was supposed that his body was carried away.

At the house of William Stranberg, William Yostrander and family were visiting. The house was swept before any one could get out. William's wife was badly injured, and his little girl was fatally hurt. William Stranberg was also fatally hurt.

At the home of Edward Norris, Gertrude Fletcher, a daughter of E. B. Fletcher, was killed. E. B. Norris was fatally injured. Calph Norris was badly hurt and his wife seriously injured. William Fletcher and his sister Kate were instantly killed. A third child was killed, and Mr. Norris was also killed at that place, also a former named Crane. Several farm hands in the vicinity of the Kunkel and Rogers farms were believed to have been killed.

Joseph Kendall's house and barn were blown down. Kendall had a narrow escape. He had just left the house to go to the barn when the house was blown down or lifted up, leaving him unharmed. The mules in the stable were not hurt. The barn was scattered all over the fields. James Millard's house was blown down. A mowing machine was carried about 100 yards and literally blown to shreds. A large iron roller weighing 1200 pounds was taken up and blown to pieces. A calf was lifted from the ground and carried a quarter of a mile. Several horses were killed and twenty-five chickens were plucked clean of feathers. Spokes of wagon-wheels were twisted and broken.

Tornado passed on to the east, passing Rush Hill, one mile north of Mexico, carrying destruction everywhere. Great destruction of property and life occurred further east. Great trees were taken up by the roots and blown off. The scene at these places is pitiable in the extreme.

E. B. Merry, Sr., said: "When I first noticed the storm the wind blew a gale. I was holding my baby in my arms when it was blown off the roof of the house and dashed against a tree. I picked it up and went back to the house to find my family scattered in every direction. My baby was about 300 yards and about twelve miles long. The loss will be about $50,000."
