Water Protection Against Fire. The town and the cotton mill seem to be getting along as nicely as two peas in a pod, and this pleasant condition might be taken as indicative of future harmony and good will. The cotton mill and the town realize that it is better for all parties to be friends rather than anything else. In a conversation with President Harris he expressed more than a willingness to take one step further in comenting the ties between the mill and the town. He would gladly join the town in joining the watermains of the town with the great pump and the inexhaustable supply of water at the cotton mill. In the mill reservoir there are always millions of gallons of water, into which the creek always ruus and keeps up the supply. The immense boilers of the mill are always hot, with not less than forty pounds of steam. The valves could be opened and the steam of the powerful boiler could be turned on in a minute, and a stream of water could be turned on to remain until the fire was extinguished.

Of course, in this we have no sort of reflec tion on the very satisfactory conduct of the water works. The city water is all that could be desired or expected, but the idea that we would emphasize is the fact that two sources of water supply is obliged to be better than one. In cases of necessity the cotton mill he perfectly willing to lend the use of its powerful pumps and its inexhaustible water supply. A necessity might arise at any time As everybody knows, machinery takes the most inopportune time to break down, and we are all acquainted with the fact that fire breaks out when and where least expected. As matters now are, if the water mains are flushed and the standpipe is emptied, there is a; time when we could not fight fire, and the town would be at the mercy of the consuming element. By the expenditure of a few hundred do lars the water mains could be connected with the pumps and the reservoir at the cotton mill. Is it not the part of wisdom to make the expenditure, so that there may never be a minute when we are without the possibil ity of all the water that may be needed.

Stocks in Abbeville. The stocks in the two banks in Abbeville have settled down, and are at home, so to speak. And no question as to them is eve raised.

The great number of former owners of the cotton mill stock, has been much reduced and now those who hold stock are pretty well loaded up. Satisfied with their holdings they are not reaching out, and if they were doing so, they would not find much of it for sale.

In Eureka hotel stock there is absolutely nothing doing. We have not heard of a single transfer of either class of stock in that institution. In the case of the Eureka the thoughts are generally absorbed in the beauty of the building, and the superb manner in which it is kept by Capt. McFall. As finality, their thoughts might some time reach the point of wondering how large a dividend the institution will pay. Aside from the financial question, even the mossbacks and out-of-date old men are taking pleasure in contemplating Abbeville's newest venture. The Eureka has had a good run of custom from the first day of its opening.

Until quite recently there was some interest in the holdings of the stock in the warehouse Even before the doors of the institution were placed on hinges, the stock of the corporation began to change hands, and it is perhaps the only institution in Abbeville whose stock has not changed hands below par. The competition in buying the stock made it lively, and finally the stock reached $120 per share, when a deal was made whereby one share holder became the owner of a majority of the stock. Since then there has been little or no enquiry for the stock, and some of it has en offered at par, with no takers.

Perhaps more interest has been felt by shareholders and others as to the stock of the furniture factory. Quite a number of shares have changed hands within the last six months, but just now but little has been done in that line. Much of it has changed hands. but at figures at par, or a little less, as the needs of the seller may have been more or less pressing, or possibly from an indefinable anxiety for change or speculation. Stock can now be had at a shade less than par.

The company made in the spring a most ex cellent showing as to results up to that time and this gave a temporary boom to the stock from which it has nearly recovered.

Rev. T. W. Sloan.

Rev. T. W. Sloan, of Greenville, during his vacation, took a little time to spend in Abbeville among his old friends and admirers. He came in on Saturday morning and remained until Monday. His visit gave much pleasure to his friends, and it is hoped that he enjoyed his visit. On Sunday he attended services at his old church.

We learn, not from him, that Greenville may guard well her interests. Mr. Sloan is so popular a preacher that other laurels will yet crown his brow. He will be called to other and even greater fields than Greenville. A man of his ability and his personal magnetism has not reached the limit of his usefulness or the zenith of his glory. Mr. Sloan is no ordinary man, and his future achievements will be measured by the standards of the ablest and the best. As Abbeville was no his abiding place, so Greenville is only a stop ping place for him as he reaches forward to the mastery of greater and better things. Greenville may well be proud of him. Other laurels will yet press his brow and other vic. tories will yet crown his work in the cause of the Master.

We Dissent.

We cannot agree with all this tommy-rot about the evils of trusts or corporations when no specific grievance can be named. The great corporations, or trusts, (the words seem to be used interchangeably,) do more for the public welfare than a million separate atoms of citizens. They build all the great industrial enterprises, and give us the best shipping in the world, and as for railreads, they are not waned since their sojourn among the Tarheels.

He and Mr. Brewer, the furniture expert of Greensboro, are figuring on building a new factory in Abbeville, and we hope that they may come. Mr. Berneau likes his old home, and he said that Mr. Brewer never saw a town which he liked better. While the public welfare than a million separate atoms of citizens. While and Mr. Bremer take the least the the least the success of the institution is assured, and Abbeville ought to give to them the glad heart. the world, and as for railroads, they are not to be compared with the little short roads and hopper trains of former years.

Before the era of great things the cost of a trip and the time necessary to go to Charleston, was about as great as it is now to New

The Newberry Observer makes a good point on the increase of female doctors in this country. In the practice of medicine good people send for a "doctor," but extra nice people send for a "physician." But the Observer was not speaking of the practice of medicine. It was "Mrs. Dr," of whom that paper spoke.

The Methodists are to have a new paper, which will be edited by the Rev. C. W. Creighton and published at the office of the Greenwood Index.

Ought te Open New Streets.

Although the cotton mill pays a large per ent of the taxes of the city, yet that instiatton receives next to none of the benefits which the citizen receives. For instance: The mill village is the most populous part of the city, and we believe it is true that in that populous section of the city, there is not laid out on the city map a foot of street or side-

It has been contended that the mill town was on private property, and this is held as a reason to relieve the city from the duty and obligation to open new streets where they are

All the land in this county is owned by private individuals, even us the mill owns the land on which the mill village is set.

When new streets or new roads are needed It is the duty of the proper authorities to open them. If the people need such streets or roads terms are made with the owners of the land over the new thorough fare is to be opened, and it is just as much the duty of the city to open and light the needed streets in the mill village as it is open and light the streets in other pasts of the town.

There is no knewn reason why the town should not open and work the needed streets of reasoning, see how the mill people can be denied the benefits of the needed streets Why discriminate against the largest tax lights to the mill operatives as are furnished to other parts of the town?

By no equitable reasoning can the denia be justified in equity. The operatives are as much entitled to streets and lights as the most favored citizen.

the mill people, why not deny them the adone proposition is as fair as the other. The talk of the mill village being private property is merely a joke. The town takes charge of those people when the services o policeman are needed, and when taxes are levied upon them they must pay. If the school authorities would do their full duty a good school house would be built for those people. They need streets, lights and schools, too.

Let on the Light.

The negro convention in Columbia last week made full and explicit expression on the subject of white men lynching negroes That subject having been fully exploited, we hope that the next meeting of this same organization may discuss as thoroughly the assaults by negros upon white women. If we knew what these self-constituted advisers thought of the crime of assault, it might clear up matters. Another phase of the question is, why do negroes always assault white women, and not women of their own race?

DONALDS DOTS.

Several from this place attended the Baptist Association which met at Phoenix.

Many of our people were awakened by a fuss last night that sounded like a cat fight, fuss last night that sounded like a cat fight, out on investigation it was found out that it was nothing but a crowd of young folks from Due West, who we suppose had come to see the train Much to their disappointment the train had gone, but they came on down to the depot and rolled the depot trucks around and played like they were trains. They seemed to have a great time, and when they left sung very beautifully, "Hang old Dunalds on the sour apple tree."

The Donalds Fair Association has opened up the books of subscription. The fair will be on a much larger scale this year than heretofore.

KING & MARTIN.

Have Confidence in the Entire Commonity.

Messrs. King & Martin, new comers amongst us from a city like Anderson, where the people during the night lock their doors against their neighbors, have perfect confidence in the integrity of every member of this community, and their faith in our people is delightful to contemplate. Live wide awake merchants like King & Martin, can leave stacks of their goods ton the side-walk in front of their store during the silent watches of the night, when policemen are on duty in other parts of the town, the fact just as well be known to the world that this is a town of nonest people who may be trusted at all times. But for the fact that some of their neighbors protested against the innovation, it is possible that Messrs. King & Martin would by this time have thrown away their store key. Better men never went to any town, and none ever showed more confidence in a community than to leave stacks of buckets on the side with distinct the nites the in a community than to leave stacks of buck-ets on the side walk during the night.

A few more such days will seriously damage them, so reports say, from the surrounding country, but without high waters, there will be much more corn made in this section this year than was made last year. During the month rapidly nearing its close, the record in influx of visitors, young men and maidens, has been broken. There never was before in so short a time, so many in our town and its community, as have been here during the past month. The house and grounds were brilliantly lighted up, comfortable seats were conveniently arranged in the yard, and these were utilized in prefersence to those in the house. In due time light retreshments were handed round, whiding up with a glass of punch, this last served in the beautiful summer house. About 12 m, the guests took their departure, feeling that it was good for them to have been there.
