VEGETINE.

An Excellent Medicine.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Feb. 25, 1877.

This is to certify that I have used VEGETINE, manufactured by H. R. Stevens, Boston, Mass., for Rheumatism and General Prostration, and have been benefited greatly, with good success. I recommend VEGETINE as an excellent medicine for such complaints.

Our Minister's Wife.

LOUISVILLE, KY., Feb. 16, 1877.

Mr. H. R. STEVENS.

Dear Sir: Three years ago I was suffering terribly with Rheumatism and General Prostration. I had been advised to take VEGETINE. After taking one bottle, I was entirely relieved. This year, feeling a return of the disease, I again commenced taking it, and have been benefited greatly. It also greatly improves digestion.

Respectfully, Mrs. A. BALLARD.

Safe and Sure.

MR. H. R. STEVENS.

In 1872 your VEGETINE was recommended to me, and I was cured of the Rheumatism and General Prostration which had been afflicting me for many years. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles.

VEGETINE.

The following letter from Rev. G. W. Mansfield, formerly pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Hyde Park, Mass., is published in Lowell, Mass., to convince every one who reads his letter of the wonderful cures effected by VEGETINE.

Mr. H. R. STEVENS.

Dear Sir:—About ten years ago my health failed from the debilitating effects of dyspepsia, and I was unable to do my duty. I was advised to take VEGETINE, and I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles.

Matters ran on thus about seven years, till May, 1874, when a friend recommended me to go to your office, and talk to you of the virtue of VEGETINE. I did so, and by your kind and patient advice, I was cured. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles.

By what I saw and heard, I gained some confidence in VEGETINE.

I commenced taking it soon after, but felt worse from its effects. Still I persevered, and soon felt it was benefiting me in other respects. Yet I did not see the results I desired until I had taken it for a little more than a year, when the difficulty in the back was cured, and for nine months I have enjoyed the best of health.

I have in that time gained twenty-five pounds of flesh, been heavier than ever before in my life, and I was never more able to perform labor than now.

During this past few weeks I had a severe cold, and I was unable to do my duty. I took VEGETINE, and I was cured. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles.

I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles.

I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles. I have since used it, and it has cured me of all my troubles.

BEAUTIFUL THINGS.

Beautiful faces are those that wear—

It matters little if dark or fair—

Whole-souled honesty printed there.

Beautiful eyes are those that show,

Like crystal pans where earth fires glow,

Beautiful thoughts that burn below.

Beautiful lips are those whose words

Leap from the heart like songs of birds,

Yet whose utterance prudence guards.

Beautiful hands are those that do

Work that is earnest and true and true,

Moment by moment, the long day through.

Beautiful feet are those that go

On kindly ministries to and fro—

Down lowliest ways, if God will so.

Beautiful shoulders are those that bear

Careless burdens of homely care,

With patient grace and daily prayer.

Beautiful lives are those that bless,

Silent rivers of happiness

Whose hidden fountains but few may guess.

Beautiful twilight at set of sun;

Beautiful goal, with race well run;

Beautiful rest, with work well done.

Beautiful graves, where grasses creep,

Where brown leaves fall, where drifts lie deep,

Over worn-out hands—oh, beautiful sleep!

HARRIET'S TRIALS AND TRIUMPHS.

A SKETCH FROM LIFE.

BY J. WM. VAN NAME, M. D.

"It is very cold to-day, Harriet," said Mr. Grey, as he looked out of the window. "I cannot bear to think of your long walk."

"Never mind, father, I am used to it now, and the exercise is good for me."

"No, no, child, not with such a thin shawl around you; I never dreamed that a child of mine would ever have to work as you do, it makes my heart ache to see how thin and pale you are growing."

"You only imagine it, father, I am as well now as I have ever been, and I do not find my duties so very arduous; you must not allow yourself to become low-spirited, you will soon be well, and then you can resume your situation, and we will be very happy again. I wish that I could stay longer to cheer you up, but I must hurry or I shall be late at the store," and she pinned her thin shawl around her, tied her worsted hood closely under her chin, and went out into the clear, cold, frosty air. A rapid walk of ten or fifteen minutes brought her to the store of Arnold &amp; Lee, which she entered and immediately commenced the duties of the day.

Mr. Grey had been a merchant in Philadelphia, and had lived in comfort and even elegance for many years, but misfortune marked him as its victim, and one evening he came home with a troubled brow, and in a faltering voice told his family that he was a bankrupt. Everything, house, furniture and silver, was sacrificed under the hammer of the auctioneer, and the merchant accepted a situation offered him as a clerk in a firm with which he was well acquainted, at a salary of one thousand dollars a year.

He provided for his little family consisting of himself, wife, and two daughters, Harriet and Laura, boarded in a comfortable but cheap boarding house, and endeavored to keep up a healthful flow of spirits, in spite of his worldly troubles. But misfortunes never come singly, is an old saying, at least it applied to Mr. Grey's case exactly, for no sooner had they become accustomed to their new home and new style of living, than Mrs. Grey was suddenly taken ill, and in three days, died, leaving little Laura only two years old to the care and guidance of Harriet, a growing girl of seventeen.

It was a severe blow to the little family, for Mrs. Grey had been a devoted wife and a true mother, and now that misfortune had overtaken them, the loss was doubly felt. But they knew that their loss was her gain, and tried bravely to bear their cross with Christian fortitude. For one year they lived in the boarding-house, always looking on the brightest side of the picture of life, and keeping the flowers of hope and faith fresh and bright in the garden of the heart.

But the "Lord chasteneth those whom he loveth," and again sorrow's dark wing fanned the brow of Mr. Grey, and darkened the pathway of his children.

One evening he came home from the store with a severe headache, and the next morning he was seized with a violent fever. For weeks he lingered between life and death, and when the dark angel left his side, permitting him to remain yet a little longer on the earth, he was so reduced in strength that it would be months before he would be able to resume his duties at the store.

Harriet felt that she must do something immediately, for they were already deeply in debt and it would take a good deal of money to support the family until her father became fully recovered.

The first step to be taken was to find a place in which to live with less expense than the boarding-house they occupied.

After two days of weary searching, she succeeded in finding two poorly furnished rooms, which she succeeded in securing at a weekly rent of two dollars.

To these miserable lodgings she removed her father, still unable to sit up, and her little sister.

Her next step was to secure for herself a situation as clerk in the large dry goods store of Arnold & Lee on Arch street. For her services there she received five dollars a week, and her small salary had supported the family for over four months, when the conversation occurred that opened our sketch.

Howard Lee, the junior partner of the firm of Arnold & Lee, had known Mr. Grey when he was a successful merchant, and in many ways assisted the broken down family.

Every morning when Harriet entered the store he gave her a kindly word and a pleasant smile, and every Saturday night sent something home for the invalid father. These little attentions, insignificant in themselves, cheered the heart of the toiling girl and made a pleasant streak of sunshine in her dreary path.

Mr. Grey's recovery was very slow; how could it be otherwise, when he was denied the comforts and indulgences so necessary to an invalid? And as day after day passed by and he became apparently no better, hope died out from his heart and gloomy thoughts continually flitted through his brain.

Four months, I said, Harriet Grey had supported her father and sister by her daily toil, and during those months she had grown old, deep care lines lurked around the mouth once dimpled with smiles, and the eyes which once shone bright as diamonds, were dimmed and sunken.

Harriet Grey had been delicately reared, and misfortune, care and toil sat heavily upon her.

"How is your father, to-day, Harriet?"

"No better, I fear; he recovers so slowly that change for the better is almost imperceptible."

"I am sorry to hear this, for you are killing yourself in order to keep your family alive. You have grown very thin and sad since you came to the store."

"I know it, but how can I help it. I cannot give up and die. We must live, and there is none but myself to work. I try not to think my lot is hard, but sometimes I am almost driven to despair; I never realized before how bitter it was to be poor."

"Harriet, I am a plain, blunt man, a man of but few words, and always say just what I mean. When I saw you in your father's house surrounded by wealth and refinement, I loved you, and as I have watched your struggles since misfortune overtook you, I now ask you to become my wife."

It is not necessary to give the trembling answer Harriet made him, but let it suffice it to say that she never stood behind the counter at Arnold & Lee's again, that in two weeks she became a bride, and her father and sister were surrounded by all the comforts of an elegant and luxurious home.

Mr. Grey recovered rapidly, and in a few months occupied the position of confidential clerk in the store where his daughter had toiled so diligently and uncomplainingly.

The clouds that had darkened the pathway of the noble girl rolled away, and sunshine filled her path with a perfect flood of soft and happy light. Through all her troubles and trials her trust was in Him who heareth the ravens when they cry, and she did not forget Him when his hand scattered blessings around her, but with a meek and trusting heart thanked Him for the goodness He had seen fit to show her.

Miscellaneous.

FOR THE HERALD.
BROADBRIM'S NEW YORK LETTER.

No. 53.

Life Among the River Pirates—The Masked Robbers' Fate—The Two Brides—Dramatic Rebellion—Stocks—Chit-chat, etc.

It is not alone in the stately mansions of the Fifth Avenue, nor in its art museums, or theatres, or churches, that New York life is seen. The villany of Wall street brokers, and the perjury of bank and insurance presidents, are but single phases of that social life, the foundation of which is laid on a volcano. Pass down two blocks from Wall street toward the west and you find a life the like of which the heart of man could scarcely conceive to exist in a civilized and enlightened community. Trinity church stands like an awful sentinel between the two,—the representative of all that is rich or aristocratic in morals or religion; the broad and splendid avenue toward Wall street being opened wide as a standing invitation for Dives and his friends to enter; while the huge rocky barrier at the back seems to wall out the road to Heaven from the desperate wretches who live at its base, and who need a heavenly ministrations as it was seldom needed by mortal men before.

For whole blocks the neighborhood is inhabited by pirates and river thieves, and the scum and refuse of our foreign population. The murderer from foreign lands or from distant cities in the States here finds congenial companions, among robbers and assassins like himself. They may not have the extensive nomenclature of crime made famous by the criminal classes of London and Paris, but even here their intercourse is interlarded with words and exclamations, the interpretation of which can only be found in the thieves' lexicon or the cracksmen's dictionary.

Along the wharves exists a race unlike any other class to be found in the city. Many of them are recruits from foreign lands—England, Ireland, France, Italy and Spain furnishing much of the material of which it is composed. Almost every man has served a longer or shorter term in State's Prison; and among the guild the man who has served two or three terms ranks infinitely above the unfortunate scoundrel who has had the bad luck to serve only one. The recruits for this terrible army are not likely to give out for the wharves swarm with hundreds of half-grown boys whose only business, is theft, who rise in the morning from some hoghead or dry goods box where they have passed the night, without knowing or caring where they will lay their heads when the sun goes down. They all have the same hard, old, pinched look; all of them chew tobacco and smoke and swear. A cop, as they call a policeman, is their natural and hereditary enemy, while all the stray vagabond dogs and social pariahs are their friends. Last October a little colony of them was discovered under one of the wharves, where they had shared their
