But the northern market is too far and the freight is too heavy. We have to sell cheaper and pay more than do the people who are closer to the cold storage plants.

There are few newspaper editors who have not had to deal with the fables of anonymous correspondents, and this class of writers have long been a factor in the ordinary routine of making a newspaper.

Do not want to be understood as taking up for the anonymous correspondent. We do not think he is necessary and we have no particular use for him; but at the same time we are able to see that he can be explained sometimes in a light that does not appear to be altogether vicious.

Generally speaking the anonymous correspondent is both ignorant and vicious. More often he is both ignorant and vicious; but sometimes he is only ignorant.

If it were not for ignorance there would be no anonymous correspondents. Any man should have sense enough to know that those in a position of high responsibility are not going to stand for things that they themselves will not stand for.

For the cowardly fellow who resorts to the sneaking expedient of sending out anything about anything, whether true or false to some other man in the hope that the other man will do that which he is afraid to do, there can be nothing but contempt. That is all such a man gets.

But all the anonymous correspondents with whom newspaper people have to do, are not of the class mentioned. Sometimes they really have valuable and meritorious matter; but so little understand the fact, that they try to work anonymously rather than subject themselves to ridicule.

Editors frequently find good ideas and suggestions in anonymous correspondence; but they cannot put those ideas or suggestions into use for various reasons, a full explanation of which is hardly worth while.

The honest correspondent who has something that he desires to call to the attention of the public should send it to the editor with his name. He need not have any fear that his name will be made public without his consent. That is not the reason the editor desires the name. He wants the name merely as a guarantee of good faith.

A notable tendency of human nature is to grumble at improvement. To quarrel with those who discover opportunities and take advantage of them.

Why this is, we don't know. Unless it comes from that natural indolence that does not like to exert itself.

For instance, the inhabitants of Southern Asia, most of Africa and the islands of the southern seas, wear little clothes. Many of them are content to go absolutely naked.

To induce these people to wear clothes is a very difficult matter. In the first place, never having learned any better, they see no need of clothes, and they are not much inclined to make exertion for that which does not impress them as necessary.

On the other hand, it is clear that the more the people are taught the use of clothes, and who are induced to want them, the stronger is the demand for cotton, wool, silks and other fabrics of which clothes are made.

Who will deny that the savage whose wants are increased even to the extent of clothes, is started on the road to greater usefulness to himself and to humanity? Denial of this proposition would mean denial of the proposition that producers of the fabrics of which clothes are made would be benefited by a better profit.

Previous to the establishment of cold storage plants in the north and west the producers of beef, chickens, eggs and scores of other hitherto quickly perishable necessities of life, were hampered for lack of stable markets, and they put forth very little effort to raise more than they could consume themselves. Even then the markets were often glutted by the modest supplies that happened from time to time and low prices discouraged further production.

At the same time he expressed his absolute faith and hope of the future, saying that he had accepted the promises of God, and had accepted the promises of the state of Georgia, and that he would be glad to see the day when the state of Georgia would be a member for more than half a century, officiated, assisted by other ministers of the city. At the city cemetery where he was laid to rest beside the graves of his wives, the last rites were conducted by the Methodist church, and the deceased was present. TOBACCO TRUST LOSER.

Big Corporation Must Dissolve and Do Business According to Law.

The government yesterday won a sweeping victory over the so-called "tobacco trust" when the supreme court of the United States held the American Tobacco company and its allied corporations to be operating in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

By directing that the combination be forbidden the privilege of interstate commerce or be placed in the hands of the receiver, the supreme court has put the tobacco corporations on a par with the Standard Oil company of New Jersey, whose dissolution was ordered two weeks ago.

Both the first and second sections of the Sherman anti-trust law were violated by the tobacco trust according to the court. Not only has it, in the eyes of the court, violated the law, but it has attempted to monopolize the tobacco business to the injury of the public and to the detriment of interstate commerce.

While the decree was regarded as unusually severe, at the same time it was regarded as a landmark in the history of the Sherman anti-trust law, making the combination an outlaw "now." The various elements of the combination are to be given an opportunity to show that they are honestly in harmony with and not in violation of the law.

Our attention to the court was announced by Chief Justice White, who also delivered the opinion of the court in the Standard Oil case. The entire court was unanimous in its decision that the Sherman anti-trust law had been violated by the tobacco trust.

Chief Justice White explained at length the decision of the court in the Standard Oil case, and the reasoning in that case so as to harmonize it in any particular with the present case. He stated that the Sherman anti-trust law is to be applied to the tobacco trust in the same manner as it was applied to the Standard Oil case.
