

Scraps and Facts.

The minister of education of Prussia has issued a decree, according to which the various school authorities are directed to systematically collect beehives and acorns which are now falling, for the sake of the bees and for the benefit of the agriculturist. It is estimated that 400,000 of the former and 100,000 tons of the latter will be wasted unless some definite steps are taken to gather them. From the components of the nuts, it has been found, a very profitable table can be made which it is believed will go a long way to relieve the present shortage in that commodity.

Representative Claude Kitchin, Democratic leader of the house, who opposes the administration's national defense program, has been invited to attend the annual meeting of the organization meeting of the ways and means committee. Kitchin said he would have a congressional inquiry into what he characterized as defense propaganda disseminated by the government. He said that he would be supported by persons allied with the manufacture of munitions. He did not comment on the statement of the committee, but said that when the preparedness program finally was adjusted by congress, he would be in a position to keep the people from being taxed for "readiness."

The British government has yielded to the American representations for removal of all restrictions on the shipment of tobacco to neutral consignees in neutral countries. The British government last Saturday from the American embassy in London. The British embassy sent the following message to the American embassy in London: "The foreign office informs me that the British government agrees for the present not to interfere with the export of tobacco shipped to neutral consignees in neutral countries and states that in these circumstances tobacco in all its forms, including cut and re-cut, is no longer required to be consigned to the Netherlands Overseas Trust." The message also states that the British government has agreed to accept the terms of the American declaration of neutrality, and that the British government has agreed to accept the terms of the American declaration of neutrality, and that the British government has agreed to accept the terms of the American declaration of neutrality.

In reply to criticisms of the American Bankers' association in connection with its declaration that many national banks charge exorbitant interest rates, John S. Williams, president of the association, issued a statement last Friday night again giving instances of such practices. Williams said that a majority of the national banks obeyed the usury laws of the various states, but that the reports of the national banks were not true. He said that the reports of the national banks were not true, and that the reports of the national banks were not true. He said that the reports of the national banks were not true, and that the reports of the national banks were not true.

Rudyard Kipling, the British author, sends the following to the London Daily Telegraph: "Who a few months ago have invented, or having invented, would you not say that the more is this: There was a boat in the North sea which ran into a net and was caught by the net. The net was entangled, meaning to cut the thing away on the surface, but a Zeppelin in waiting saw and bombarded her, and she had to go on. The net was not too widely, or she would not get herself more wrapped up than ever. She went down and was crushed. And weaving and wriggling, guided only by guesses at the meaning of each scrape and grind of the net on her blind forehead, she tried to clear then she sat on the bottom and thought the question over, whether she should go on or whether she should confederate against the trap or wait until the destroyers, which she knew the Zeppelin would have signalled, should come out. Albeit she still entangled as she would suppose in the net, which was a simple calculation of comparative advantage. She decided when it was worked out she decided to try for the double event. Within the few minutes of the net she saw them, she heard the witter of four destroyers' screws quivering above her. She rose, got her shot in, and saw the destroyers. She was not around till another took the wreck to town; and said goodbye to the spare buoy, and reached the rendezvous in time to warn her friends.

Mrs. Phillip Snowden, wife of a member of the British parliament, who with Madame Curie and other women to meet at the Hague on December 4, on Henry Ford's peace ship, the Oscar II. "President Wilson is in absolute sympathy with the initiative peace conference," Mrs. Snowden has said. "You need not plead with me. I am anxious, most anxious, to do what I can for peace. I shall earnestly endeavor to unite official opinion to that end." Mrs. Snowden, through the woman's peace party, has been able to catch him in the interview, before her departure on the steamship Ryndam for England, where she will be going to join Mr. and Mrs. George Bernard Shaw and other prominent English men and women to meet at the Hague on December 4, on Henry Ford's peace ship, the Oscar II.

These merchants in Anderson and Greenwood certainly believe in advertising, and it is no wonder people go from Asheville to Greensboro to buy their goods. The Daily Mail and Daily Intelligencer of Anderson, carry from 8 to 16 pages of advertising. The Daily Intelligencer of Greensboro carries two whole pages of advertising. The Daily Intelligencer of Asheville carries two whole pages of advertising. The Daily Intelligencer of Asheville carries two whole pages of advertising. The Daily Intelligencer of Asheville carries two whole pages of advertising.

It is undoubtedly a fact that Greenwood and Anderson are two of the South Carolina. It is also a fact that the business people of these two towns are among the liveliest and most liberal advertisers. There may be some question as to whether the progressive spirit makes the liberal advertiser, or the liberal advertiser makes the progressive spirit.

He weighed his side also and it, too, was just seven ounces below weight. Then he entered the shop and arrested Ermann. The commissioner said they found Ermann had been using four ounces less than the weight on the counter and beneath it he had fashioned an arrangement which he operated with a pocket watch. The counter and what automatically increased by exactly seven ounces the record weight of anything placed on it. Ermann had sold more than 200 turkeys yesterday, and so had profited at the rate of $100. Ermann pleaded guilty and was arraigned before Magistrate Koenig. He was held for trial in special sessions.

Many editorial paragraphs appear in the newspapers of this county which are not intended to be taken seriously. One such paragraph appeared in the Washington last Saturday from the American embassy in London. The British embassy sent the following message to the American embassy in London: "The foreign office informs me that the British government agrees for the present not to interfere with the export of tobacco shipped to neutral consignees in neutral countries and states that in these circumstances tobacco in all its forms, including cut and re-cut, is no longer required to be consigned to the Netherlands Overseas Trust." We are not familiar with all the details that have led up to the trial of Tom Watson for sending obscene literature through the mails; but we understand it the prosecution has grown out of Tom Watson's fight against the Roman Catholic church. Mr. Watson is one of those men who believes that the one great end to which the Catholic church is striving is the re-organization of the temporal power of the pope. He is something of a rabid about the middle of the last century. He thinks that all the efforts of the present day church are dedicated to this end, and that America is an especially promising field for operations. He holds to the conviction that all Roman Catholics believe that temporal power is the special prerogative of their church, and that the pope is the great deal more than a man, and that he is regarded by him as service to Christ. In his fighting against the Roman Catholic church, Mr. Watson has used certain alleged beliefs and practices of the church, some of them in the guise of Latin quotations, and some of them in the guise of Latin quotations, and some of them in the guise of Latin quotations.

The liberal advertiser makes the progressive spirit; but it is unquestionably a fact that one is characteristic of the other, and the two are always found together. As to how far the excellent Asheville Medium may be blamed for the lack of the advertising spirit in Asheville, we cannot say. It is a fact that the Asheville Medium attaches to the Greenwood and Anderson papers for the liberality of their advertising. All of these papers are of excellent quality, and are well adapted to do with the situation in the one case and the other. A progressive medium, however, that a progressive paper is an advertising paper and an advertising paper is a progressive paper.

That Rock Hill idea of establishing a school for cooks is a good one, well worthy of emulation over the state. When Secretary Timmons of the Rock Hill chamber of commerce, was asked about it, he took occasion to give full credit to Superintendent Burts of the Graded schools, and Manager Guard of the Gas company; but at the same time he stated that the movement had the endorsement and approval of the chamber of commerce.

A country merchant who lives near Yorkville, stepped into the store of Mr. G. W. Sherer (Old George, and the butcher) a few days ago, and, after inquiring about the price of a ham, he said: "I have had a ham for two or three years, and I have never sold a package yet." Old George replied, "and the trouble with you," he said, "is that you are not a merchant. If you have a good thing that you must advertise it."
