

DIVORCES.

AUSTRALIAN.—Divorces have never been sanctioned in Australia.

JWS.—In olden times the Jews had a discretionary power of divorcing their wives.

JAYS.—If the wife be dissatisfied she can obtain a divorce by paying a certain sum.

THERETAS.—Divorces are seldom allowed, unless with the consent of both parties, neither of whom can afterwards marry.

MOSES.—If the wife does not become the mother of a boy, she may be divorced with the consent of the tribe, and she can marry again.

ABYSSINIANS.—No form of marriage is necessary. The connection may be dissolved and renewed as often as the parties may think proper.

SIBERIANS.—If the man be dissatisfied with the most trifling acts of his wife, he tears her cap or veil from her head, and this constitutes a divorce.

CANANS.—The husband can divorce his wife or treasure, and leave her the charge of maintaining the children. If she proves unfaithful, he can put her to death.

ROMANS.—The first wife may be divorced, not sold, as the others may be. She then may claim the first, third and fifth child, and the alternate children are yielded to the husband.

ANCIENT EGYPT.—When a man desires a divorce he leaves the house in anger and does not return for several days. The wife understands the hint, packs her clothes and leaves.

DRUSE AND TURKOMAN.—Among these people, if a wife asks her husband's permission to go out, and she goes, she is not adding, "but come back again," is divorced. Though both parties desire it, they cannot live together again without being remarried.

COCHIN CHINA.—If the parties choose to separate they break a pair of chopsticks or a copper coin in the presence of witnesses, by which action the union is dissolved. The husband must restore to the wife the property belonging to her prior to marriage.

AMERICAN INDIANS.—Among some tribes the pieces of sticks given as the sign of divorce. Usually new connections are formed without the old ones being dissolved. A man never divorces his wife if she has a child.

TARTARS.—The husband may put away his partner and seek another, when it pleases him, and the wife may do the same. If she is ill-treated, she complains to the magistrate, who, attended by the principal people, accompanies her to the house and pronounces a formal divorce.

CHINESE.—Divorces are allowed in all cases of criminality, mutual dislike, jealousy, incompatibility of temper, or too much levity on the part of either wife. The husband cannot sell his wife until she leaves him and becomes a slave to him by action of the law for desertion. A son is bound to divorce his wife if she displeases his parents.

CRACOVIAN.—Two kinds of divorce are granted in Cracovia—one total, the other provisional. When the first is allowed, the parties can immediately marry again; where the second exists the couple agree to separate for a year, and if at the expiration of that time the husband does not send for his wife, her relations may command of him a total divorce.

GRECIANS.—A settlement was usually given to a wife at marriage for support in case of a divorce. The wife's portion was then restored to her, and the husband required to pay monthly interest for its use for the time he detained it from her. Usually the men could put their wives away on slight occasions. Even the four of them were rarely ever sufficed. Divorces scarcely ever occur in modern Greece.

HINDOOS.—Either party for a slight cause may leave the other and marry. Where this desire is, there is not the least trouble. A man calls his wife "mother," it is considered indecent to live with her again. Among one tribe, the "Gores," if the wife be unfaithful, the husband cannot obtain a divorce unless she gives her all the property and children. A woman, on the contrary, may leave when she pleases, and marry another man, and convey to him the entire property of the former husband.

ROMANS.—In olden times a man might divorce his wife if she was barren, or she counterfeited his private keys, or drank without his knowledge. They could divorce their wives when they pleased. Notwithstanding this, 621 years elapsed without one divorce. Afterward a law was passed allowing either sex to make the application. Divorces then became frequent on the slightest pretences. Seneca says that some women no longer reckoned the years by the consuls, but by the number of their husbands. St. Jerome says of a man who had buried twenty wives, and a woman who had buried twenty-two husbands. The Emperor Augustus endeavored to restrain the license by penalties.—Bench and Bar.

A Joke on a Horse.

One of the commission houses on Woodbridge street has a horse which was the terror of every pedestrian who got within three feet of his head. The animal has teeth like a shark, and up to a few days ago he bit everything that came in his reach except a pile of grindstones. Whipping had no effect, and he would get rid of muzzles as fast as they were put on. The firm had paid out considerable money to settle for his bites, and was wondering what they could do to get him, when along came a man who guaranteed a cure for $5. He was told to go to work, and his first move was to get and old suit of clothes and stuff it with straw. The horse was driven down the street and the suit was tied to a hitching-post, back to the street. A full pound of Cayenne pepper was then rubbed into and sprinkled over the garments and the straw stuffing, and the joke was ready.

The horse came jogging back, and the driver left him standing within six feet of the man of straw. The old timer's eyes had a twinkle as he saw a fine chance to no his teeth, and soon he left alone he sneezing towards the post. When ready for business he snatched a sudden lunge and caught the "man" by the shoulder. That old horse meant wickedness, but he had a surprise in store for him. As he lifted the figure off its feet and gave it a shake it fell apart, and the suit was tied to a hitching-post, back to the street. A full pound of Cayenne pepper was then rubbed into and sprinkled over the garments and the straw stuffing, and the joke was ready.

THE DRIFT OF POLITICS.

Garfield and the Grant Leaders.

An interview published in Columbus this week gives some of the inside workings of the Republican leaders of Ohio. It is understood that the interview, while not in Gov. Foster's name, speaks the correct views of the Governor, and that he desired the information to go to the public. After talking with Grant, the man had talked with the Grant leaders about Garfield and finally announced himself as a candidate for Senator because Garfield refused to tender him the treasury portfolio, the interview proceeded to define the (friendly) relation to the Grant leaders. In answer to the question, "How is Garfield disposed toward the Grant-Conkling leaders?" the following was given:

Personally he is very well disposed. Politically he does not recognize the so-called principles as entitled to any more respect than those of the Democrats, if indeed, as much. At first Gen. Garfield felt impelled to decline the nomination because Arthur was put on the ticket with him. His visit to New York was to urge upon the National committee the propriety of his own withdrawal or that of Arthur. His friends talked him out of urging the matter by showing him that the Vice-Presidency was a mere cipher that would be entirely without an administration, and that official etiquette did not require the President to ask the Vice-President's opinion on any subject—say, it would be a breach of etiquette to consider the Vice-President as a member of the cabinet.

The Vice-President is simply a coroner who sits in the political morgue and communes with the corpse. Death may promote him, but nothing else can disturb his sepulchral serenity. After the Warrenton meeting, Gen. Grant, Logan and the elder Cameron called on Gen. Garfield. He received them as his honored guests. They sat around his table and mapped out his administration as though they were making a partition of their own property. Gen. Garfield was too well-bred to take issue with them under his own roof and under such circumstances. He listened to all they said with dignified silence. They went away with the idea that they had made a "bargain." Their assurance nettled Gen. Garfield. This is the true version of the "compact," and the first time it has been given out to the public. Conkling and Grantism and all that they were impelled to find no place under Garfield's administration. He owes nothing, either in his nomination or his election, to these men or the men who expounded them. He will open his office with a clean ledger and no debts to any of them.
