CHRISTMAS IN WAR TIMES.

Battle With Snowballs.

Captain "Tip" Harrison, in Atlanta Journal.

Early in December, 1862, General Lee took up a defensive position along the southern bank of the Rappahannock river. General Burnside had been appointed to the command of the Army of the Potomac place of McClellan, removed. He was ordered to advance on to Richmond. He attempted to obey his instructions, but the Army of Northern Virginia under Lee, Longstreet and Jackson, assisted by A. H. Hays and other officers, under the command of Jubal Early, Pickett, Stuart, Barksdale, Tom Cobb, Kershaw, Gregg, Hoke, Evans, Ransom, Walker and others confronted him and his well organized, well equipped legions, and hurled them back.

The clash of the two armies on the 12th and 13th days of December came in the midst of a freezing cold spell, and when the conflict ended the Confederates were sent up and down the river to find suitable quarters for winter. In a few days the battles were apparently forgotten, and the sound of axes resounded through the woods, above and below Fredericksburg, as the men set busily to work to erect huts for the winter. By Christmas the most of the commands had built rude structures, and all were housed, after a fashion. The boys were supplied with pretty fair rations and with boxes from home occasionally they managed to appease the pangs of hunger.

The average Confederate soldier was a jolly young fellow, and always made the most of his surroundings. He did not expect to be lavishly supplied with necessities, and luxuries were talked about around the fire, but never enjoyed only in their dreams.

"Winter quarters" meant many privations and hardships, but the period was always welcomed by the men. It brought quietude and rest, and the thoughts of fierce conflicts were for the time forgotten. They were able as the shanties were, they afforded shelter from the wind and snows, and with large fireplaces and plenty of wood, the boys made themselves comparatively comfortable, and were jolly and happy.

An Unique Report.

The Greensboro Ala., Watchman credits the following to an exchange:

When it was first arranged for post-masters to send in quarterly reports of their business, the following was furnished to the Greensboro Ala., Watchman, Fulton, Ga., Ill., and is a model of comprehensiveness, if not of grammatical precision. It is on file at the postoffice department and reads as follows: "waterford, July 6, 1856. 'muster James buckanin, president of United States-Deer Sur Bank required by the instruction of the post office to report quarterly. I now fulfill that plea in duty by reporting as follows. The Harvostin has been going on pretty well and most of the nabors have got their cuttin about done, wheat is hard a average crop, on rollin lars corn is yellowish and want out, the weather is pretty good, the health of the community is 'only tolerably mesills and colery have broke out, in about 2 and a half miles from hear, their are a powerful awaken on subje of religin in the potts naborhood and many souls are being saved, I have reciev'd a letter from given missy Smith, a neer nabor had twins day before yesterday one of them is a poor, scraggy thing and won't live half its days this is about all I know and have no report to make on my nabor, I will report to Mrs. Buckanin and subscribe myself yours Truly 'Abigail Jenkins, 'p. m. at Fulton Co. Ill.'"

Engine Worth $7,000,000.

SLEEPY EYE MINN. Jan 7.—Grant Bramble, telegraph operator and agent at the station here, and elected Tuesday an alderman of this village is now worth $7,000,000, it is said.

Mr. Bramble, who is an Englishman of 33 years, thus speaks of his rotary engine, the right of which he has just sold to the Allen syndicate of England—he will receive three-fourths of the money in cash:

"I first got the idea of a rotary engine from the turbine wheel. I could not see why steam could not do what water did, especially when steam had qualities that water lacked and which were essential. When a little turbine is hit by a column of water no bigger than a pencil, sounding like a gun, it revolves, and the motion is transferred to the best 'pen pistons' of the dauntless old warrior which I have ever come across in connection with the steam engine."

"I had an idea necessary to get the greatest possible development of the steam expansion in order to give success to the idea, and I have been working along this line for twelve years. It took many models and a great many failures to get the thing right. I first tried a vertical engine, that seemed to be perfect, and would spin along like a top, only to stop when some unexplainable point was reached. Finally, about five years ago, I hit the machine I am now using as is to be seen in the picture. It was patented a year ago, and I now have patents in England, France, Belgium, Germany and nearly all over the world. The Allen Engineering Syndicate, at the head of which is F. H. Allen, of the Allen Syndicate Company, of Liverpool, has purchased the right for the machine for Europe and for the United States, the total for the two being $7,000,000."

There have been fourteen of the engines built, all experimentally, and they have been tested everywhere. You could find a place for them except on locomotives. I have run circular saws with them up to 1,200 revolutions, emery wheels, centrifugal fans and blowers, creamery separators up to 6,500 revolutions, and dynamos, all completed direct to the engine. They have been used in elevators, hoisting works, boats and machine shops. The largest engine, 250 horse-power, has been in use in a Trenton, N. J., dynamo room since February last, giving the best of satisfaction. It is about six by eighteen inches on the floor, and stands less than two feet high. It weighs three hundred pounds and is run by a 120 horse-power boiler.

"My invention relates to motors, and particularly to rotary engines having reversible concentric pistons. The objects in view are to provide a machine of simple construction with means for providing the maximum expansion of steam, to provide an improved method of starting, and to provide a simple and efficient means for lubricating and packing the piston. The engine can be made of straight running or compound or triple expansion. To compound an engine it is only necessary to exhaust the steam in a chest, lead it to a second set of recesses in the periphery of the piston and use it over there; to double it a second chest and a third set of recesses are cut in the periphery of the piston. My little 40 horse-power simple engine, run by a 20 horse-power boiler, will indicate 50 when compound and about 65 when tripled. I think it is doing pretty well to get 65 horse-power from the consumption of a 20-horse-power boiler.

Pianos That Catch Cold.

Half the pianos of this country catch winter colds exactly as we do. They get hoarse, or have a cough, or a stiff note, or some similar complaint which cannot be cured by their owners, but which, by purchase, tedious and expensive doctoring.

In order to prevent these avoidable ailments, a piano should be kept in a moderately warm room, where the temperature is even, say 70 to 75 degrees, the room round the piano should be kept closed, and covered with a felt cloth, when not in use, particularly in frosty weather.

Always place the piano against an inside wall, and a little out from it.

Home Politeness.

The boy who is polite to father and mother is likely to be polite to everybody else. A boy lacking respect to his parents may have the semblance of courtesy in society, but is never truly polite in spirit, and is in danger, as he becomes familiar, of betraying his real want of courtesy.

We are all in danger of living too much for the outside world, for the impression we make in society, coveting the good opinion of others, and caring too little for the opinion of those who are in a sense a part of ourselves.

We say to every boy and girl, cultivate the habit of courtesy and propriety at home and you will be sure in other places to act in a becoming and attractive manner.

Who makes a quick use of the moment is a genius of prudence.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, and all Skin Eruptions, and is never truly polite in spirit, and is in danger, as he becomes familiar, of betraying his real want of courtesy.

Behind his Commissions.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 6.—The Court of Appeals today reversed the decision of the Court below in the celebrated South Carolina bond case. The suit grew out of a dispute between T. Edward Hamilton & Co. and other Baltimoreans and Col. Rhoad, of Georgia, and a banker named Lancaster, of New York and Richmond, over a division of commission for floating a bond issue of the State of South Carolina. In 1892 Rhoad obtained authority from the authorities of South Carolina to float six million State bonds. He applied to Lancaster for aid in forming a syndicate to take them. Lancaster was unable to float the entire issue and Hamilton & Co. were appointed to take the balance. The Court holds that the syndicate had a right to know what these syndicate agents had done, and that they were not obliged to keep their commissions secret. The Court holds that the syndicate had a right to know what these syndicate agents had done, and that they were not obliged to keep their commissions secret.

These agents, therefore, to cite and administer all kindred and creditors of the said B. F. Morrow, deceased, to be and appear before me in Court of Probate, to be held at Anderson, S. C., on the 16th day of January, 1897, after publication hereof, to show cause, if any they have, why the said Administration should not be granted. Given under my hand this 12th day of February, 1897.
