

THE CHARLESTON DAILY NEWS, G. R. CATHCART, Editor. CATHCART, McMillan & Morton, Proprietors. No. 18 HAYNE-STREET.

CHARLESTON. MONDAY MORNING, JANUARY 1, 1866. Our readers will be, doubtless, pleased to see that we have fulfilled the promise we made them some time since, and enter on the year with more expanded pages.

TERMS—CASH. DAILY—ONE YEAR... $10.00. DAILY—SIX MONTHS... $6.00. DAILY—THREE MONTHS... $3.50.

ADVERTISING. One Square, Ten Lines, one insertion, ONE DOLLAR. The following are the Agents for this paper: JOSEPH H. SEARS, "New South," Hilton Head.

LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE STATE. LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE CITY. THE LIST OF LETTERS remaining in the Postoffice at the end of each week is published officially in THE DAILY NEWS every Friday morning.

News Summary. The steamship Granada, Capt. R. BAXTER, reached her wharf in this city, at an early hour on Saturday last, after a fine run from New York.

The official statement of the Treasury Department of a late date, shows the National Bank circulation to be $233,735,000. An increase of upward of 24,000,000 has been issued during the past week.

The schooner Jen, of Belfast, from Portland for Boston, with molasses, was abandoned at sea on the 23d December, in a sinking condition. The crew were saved.

The Erie Railway has just negotiated a loan of four million five hundred thousand dollars, in England, for the completion of its double track.

Eleven negroes have been recently sentenced to the penitentiary from Montgomery County, Alabama, and seven from Tuscaloosa County. At this rate the Penitentiary of that State will be soon filled with this class of prisoners.

The instructions of our new Minister to Mexico, who is ordered at once to his post, and to remain near President JUAREZ, are of so decided a character that the Imperial party will not be long in ascertaining the policy of the United States Government.

A Maine paper states that a colony of fifty families, principally from that State, is to embark for Palestine in July next. They propose to settle at Jaffa, the ancient Joppa, building lots having been purchased, and will carry out with them Yankee improvements.

The question of an appointment to fill the vacancy in the United States District Judgeship, occasioned by the death of Judge CATRON, having given rise to recent speculation, it is an opinion that the appointment belongs to the South, and it will for a time be held in abeyance.

WILLIAM A. HAMMOND, late Surgeon-General of the United States, has gone to Europe, in charge of a grandson of the late JAMES JACOB ASTOR, and a gossiping correspondent says that he receives for his services $10,000 in gold for six months' all traveling and subsistence expenses liberally paid—and $3000 for each month occupied beyond the sixth.

The schooner ship, Capt. HEERING, from New York for Charleston, arrived at Nantuxet Monday night, the 24th December, and went to pieces. All hands were lost. One man swam ashore, but died from exposure after walking half a mile along the beach.

Mormonism looms up as the next hobby before the country. Old army officers who have served on the plains, and who have been brought in contact with the people of Salt Lake City, and besieging the President with suggestions and plans for the employment of our military force against the Latter Day Saints, in default of an opportunity for their employment against MAXIMILIAN and NAPOLEON.

THE PROOF volume, just from the government press, giving full statistical information regarding manufactures in this country, asserts that the present value of the manufactured cotton is equal to three dollars and sixty-eight cents per capita of the whole population of the United States.

Time, the greatest living journalist, has closed the volume of the year that is gone, and spreads before the world, to-day, the first unprinted page of that to come. We all must be contributors.

It tells of republics, young and vigorous, each the champion of its social forms, with powers marshaled and nerves strained to a struggle for existence, in which the weaker falls to rise no more; of the President who, with brilliant fortunes and boundless prospects of ambition, falls, in the very hour of triumph, by the hand of an assassin; of that President, grave, accomplished, of Roman firmness and integrity, who, less than a year ago, sat secure in the capital city by a powerful army, and who, now for many months, has been the tenant of a dungeon, reduced to beg the charity of a public trial.

It tells of a man, elected to high office, but of no great influence—the leader of no party then in power—selected for no merit, however he may have possessed it, but rather as an instrument to wield his State—with no hope or fear that he would ever come to power, but who, yet, has come to be their President—nor that alone, but of the Union; nor, of the Union only, but of the Union restored by his agency and order, from which he holds a higher place, to-day, than any man has ever held upon this continent.

It tells of that general, loved and honored by his country and the world, who, in command of one vast army, with authority to order others over the whole extended field of that great contest, stood with his war-worn marshals grouped around him, the central figure of a most imposing military scene, and who is now the peaceful president of a college in Virginia. It tells of those generals then around him, the heroes of more contested fields than any living men, and whose names have passed beyond the limits of their land's language, of whom one is the president of an express company, one of a railroad, some are dead, some in trade, some in exile, and all are forced by patient labor to procure their daily bread. It tells of slavery, an institution which had stood the test of time; which had fixed its foundations in the habits and necessities of a great people; which had vindicated its claims to merit by great achievements; which had found the means to mingle races; which had brought savages to participation and agency in the highest civilization of the age, and the world in tribute to its industry, but which has been stricken down; and the ligaments of whose constitution have been broken; whose commingled races have been torn apart, with nothing left for each, but to grope, as best it may, to a civilization of its own. Of this and more it tells; and it must be owned that there are few stories of more graphic grandeur in any language of the world than that presented by the simple records of this single year. It is not, of course, for us to realize its epic beauty. That can only come when time and distance shall have mellowed it. These terrible realities are too vivid to admit the play of fancy; but while to us there is but the sense of being crushed by their impending pressure, they will surely rise with time, and be blended into song in after ages.

The volume upon which we enter, it to be hoped, will be less dramatic. But though necessarily of fearful interest, we may not look upon its pages until they shall be turned by time to our experience; the characters are already doubtless traced upon it. There is already written, doubtless, if we could but read it, all that we must know and feel throughout the year, for that which must be, is; and amid events of such exceeding moment there is a natural wish that we may anticipate the record, but that is not permitted. Who grope through space, even in the utmost destitution of a starless winter, may pry his household goods and cherished relics, and may cast some feeble ray of light upon the path before him; but who gropes through the winter of his starless life can find no fire from the conflagration of all his past, to cast a gleam of light one step beyond the threshold of the future.

The Philadelphia Press, in its issue of last Saturday, in an article headed "Southern Indebtedness," indulges in some remarks as unkind and ungenerous in spirit, as they are untrue and without foundation in point of fact. The Press contends that "the people of the South are naturally much worried about their debts; and, finding that the reputation of some of the State obligations, incurred during the war, is necessary to enable them to become once more classed among the good citizens of the Union, they are endeavoring to secure the reputation of their private debts also." That there may be some individuals among us who, having lost their all by the emancipation of their slaves and destruction of their property, have not the means to meet their liabilities (their assets being destroyed), and, therefore, desire the reputation of a debt they have lost the means of liquidating, we are willing to admit. But that "THE PEOPLE OF THE SOUTH," at least such portion of them as are able to settle with their Northern creditors, desire to avoid doing so, is most emphatically false. We have lost much, but our honor still remains, and it is absurd to suppose that the same people, whose high principles of honor prompted them, during the war and when success attended their arms in every direction, to ignore the Sequestration Act, whereby, by a merely nominal payment in a depreciated currency, they could have been relieved of all these debts due those at the time our enemies, would desire now to defraud those whom we again regard as our countrymen, even though they yet refuse to give us our political dues. There is much satisfaction, however, in the thought that the Philadelphia Press is not the mouth-piece of our Northern brethren, and does not express their sentiments. Hundreds of cases have come to our knowledge, where Southern men have gone to New York, and lacking the means to settle in full, have offered their creditors a part payment on account, which those creditors, with a much higher appreciation of our principles of honesty and honor than the Press, most generously and magnanimously declined to accept, preferring to give ample time and await the payment of the whole, when the debts could be more conveniently liquidated. These gentlemen will never have cause to regret the confidence they place in our integrity, and whilst the great mass of the Northern people do us justice, we can afford to despise the unjust slurs of a narrow-minded journal.

THE NEW FIELD. A WEEKLY PAPER, PUBLISHED AT PARLING-TON COURT HOUSE, has recently been transferred to its original proprietors. Located in the same District, and under the same management, it is in communication with all parts of the country, and especially with the cities of Charleston, Columbia and Wilmington, from which it has a large circulation. It is formerly well known to the press of the State as one of the original numbers, and for several years Editor of the Darlington Flag, which paper was discontinued at the beginning of the war. As natives of the South we respectfully solicit a share of the advertising patronage. Darlington C. H., S. C. COOPER & CO., Publishers. December 25
