The Republican caucus of the Pennsylvania Legislature has nominated John Scott as United States senator to succeed Senator Bucklew, whose term expires March 4. The nomination is equivalent to election.

The East River, it is said, will eventually be the ruin of New York Bay. An engineer has therefore made a plan for doing away with it by means of a dike from the South Ferry to Brooklyn, with dock accommodations on both sides.

The guano trade of Baltimore has materially decreased, the importation having fallen off from 46,148 tons in 1867, to 18,887 in 1868. The Chinchilla Islands sent 30,175 tons in 1867, and only 17,000 tons in 1868. The high price demanded for guano, $63 00 per ton in gold, prevents its use except in the manufacture of other fertilizers.

The importations of dry goods into the port of New York during 1868 are valued at $20,906,534, or 100% over $10,000,000, valued at $12,222,855, and during 1865 at $9,196,138. It is stated that in August, 1865, the importations began to flow in with great rapidity, and for eight months the business was very brisk. Since that time however, no similar condition of affairs has prevailed. In the past year the importers' profits have not been large, but there have been no disastrous losses.

The New York Times says: "During the past ten days failures to the extent of about four millions of dollars have occurred in this city, among jobbers and commission houses in the dry goods trade. Business in this line has been very dull for nearly two years; it has not been the recent failure of one of the largest dry goods houses was due to heavy losses through customers in the Northwestern States. There are apprehensions that a few other houses may be forced to succumb, but the leading dealers hope by rigid retrenchment to overcome present difficulties. No alarm is necessary, as we are informed on excellent authority."

The lives of compositors in New York city, it is asserted, do not average over forty-five years. The causes of this short-lived career of this useful class of workmen are to be attributed to working at night, and to the want of ventilation, and the overheating of composing rooms. Newspaper offices are seldom situated in buildings expressly constructed for the purpose, and the composing rooms are placed in the upper story, where the ceiling is low and without the proper means of ventilation. In addition to this, the scanty supply of oxygen is further diminished by the constant burning of gas lights.

Washington correspondents state that General Butler is privately canvassing the House to find out how many members will vote to repeal the Civil Tenure Bill. He finds almost every man disposed to wait until General Grant develops his course. The prospect here seems discouraging, unless he can make a careful canvass of the Senate two years; it has a sentiment that that body on the question of repealing the Civil Tenure law, follows: For repeal, twenty-eight; against repeal, thirty-nine. That a modification will be agreed upon is not impossible, but that the law as it will not be relinquished by the Senate is conceded.

A Washington letter, of Friday, to the Baltimore Sun, says: "A caucus of Radical senators was held this morning, lasting some two hours. The call for the caucus, it is understood, was made at the instance of Senator Sherman and the finance committee, and the time was occupied altogether in the discussion of the finances. There was a pretty general interchange of views. Senators expressed themselves most freely as to the best mode of disposing of the vexed question, but in view of the great uncertainty and distrust which hang around the question no one seemed disposed to insist on his own particular plan as being the panacea, although there has not heretofore been so much modesty exhibited. No votes were taken and no conclusions arrived at, and senators generally seem to have come to the reluctant conclusion that little, if any, prospect exists of any progress being made this session towards any satisfactory adjustment of the finances."

A special report from the Postmaster-General to Congress on the subject of a general system of postal telegraphy has been published. Its main points are as follows: After reviewing the telegraph system under government control, in connection with the postoffice in Belgium and Switzerland, and the measures which are now before the British Parliament for the establishment of a similar system in England, he refers to the efforts made here for these efforts heretofore to the interested advice and action of the telegraph companies and managers. He feels confident that the telegraph, in connection with the postoffice, and under the control of government, can be made much more serviceable and cheap to the public. He therefore recommends the pas-page of an act by Congress incorporating a company which shall construct telegraph lines along all the postal routes of the United States, and which shall contract with the Postmaster-General to deliver messages at a low and fixed rate. The rate recommended at present is to average about one cent a word for all distances not exceeding five hundred miles, and five cents for every five words beyond that distance. These rates are to be determined in the act of Congress, but the Postmaster-General is to have the power of reducing them whenever the profits exceed ten per cent of the company's capital, which is to be limited to two hundred dollars a mile. This provision is intended to prevent an inflation of the capital. Mr. Randall is severe on the present management of the telegraph, and calls it an injurious monopoly. He opposes the establishment of any experimental lines by the government, and calls upon Congress to establish a general system at once.

CHARLESTON.

MONDAY MORNING, JANUARY 11, 1869.

The Savannah and Charleston Railroad.

We publish this morning a memorial addressed to the General Assembly by the tax-payers of Charleston, praying that such assistance may be given as will enable the Savannah and Charleston Railroad to complete their road throughout.

We have already explained at length the position of the Company and its necessities, and what, in our opinion, is the proper course for the General Assembly to pursue; and if any proof were needed of the truth and correctness of the arguments which we have advanced, it would be found in the memorial of which we speak. It is signed by merchants, factors, brokers, bankers, real estate owners, machinists, shopkeepers, and every other class of tax-payers. It includes every occupation, and represents every shade of political opinion—the name of the fery Democrat standing by the side of that of the most resolute Republican. The memorial, in a greater degree than any other of which we have knowledge, represents the tax-payers of Charleston, and, to our mind, is the most influential document presented of late years by this city to the General Assembly of the State.

With the expression of the views of the commercial capital of the State before them, and with the knowledge that what we ask is for the common good, and that not one cent is expected to be taken from the treasury, the Legislature cannot well do other than consider and adopt at once such measures as may be necessary for obtaining the ends which their petitioners desire.

The Political Murder Bill.

We are surprised and sorry to see that a bill has been introduced into the lower house of the General Assembly "to provide for the widows and orphans of men murdered for their political opinions," by giving them a pension of $200, to be collected by assessment upon the county where the murder was committed.

We have always condemned violence and intemperance, and have denounced every act of violence, whatever its provocation. The feeling of the people is opposed to mob law upon any pretext, and as it is our doctrine that every man has the right to his own opinion, we have steadily discountenanced persecution and proscription for political or party reasons. But it is useless for the people in general to be peaceable and law abiding, if the whole of one county in the State is to be held responsible for the lawless deeds of any one man in it. In every large body of people, there must be individual cases of disorder and wrong; but we say that it is shamefully unjust to impose a tax upon a whole community because some one man in it is not gentle as a sucking dove.

Of course, if the General Assembly of the State is nothing more than an organization for the dissemination of Radical opinions, for the encouragement of party hate, and for rewarding party disciples, the bill will pass, whether we like it or not. But this we are loath to believe. We know that there are men in the Legislature who feel that it is their interest to work for the good of the whole State, and that we can have neither prosperity nor peace while any question is decided in the affirmative or negative, according to the manner in which it affects "the party." And we would ask these members whether they can expect to be thought of as representatives of the State, or of any part of it; whether they can expect to be treated as representatives of the people at large, when they tax the State and the people to support the heirs of a man who has been killed, not for the State, not in the execution of the laws, not in the service of the Commonwealth, but to use the words of the bill, "on account of his political opinions."

If any man is murdered, and should be deemed a martyr to the cause, his widow and children might properly be supported by the party to which he belonged. The Union League should take care of his family, and if there is no money in the treasury of the League, it can be contributed by the surviving members of the party.

On the floor of the General Assembly there should be no manifestation of political hatred, and no raking of the smoldering party fires. The Legislature is on trial, and we who must bear the brunt wait to learn whether it means war upon all that is not Radical, or peace and good will to all loyal and honest men. We desire to do nothing that shall cause anger or ill feeling. We desire that the General Assembly may have a fair and full opportunity of vindicating itself from aspersion, or of damaging itself in public esteem; but we cannot be silent when it is proposed to make the Legislature a huge Radical caucus, a means of rewarding the fallen faithful, and of taxing the State because this man or that man has been wantonly and brutally killed.

We speak somewhat warmly, because we feel that this political martyrdom bill is a scandal and a shame. Even Congressional partnership never went so far as this bill proposes to go, and we sincerely hope that when the bill comes up for action it will be promptly and decisively rejected.

The Bank of the State.

The grounds upon which the injunction against Governor Scott, to prevent him from issuing bonds to the billholders of the Bank of the State, is to be applied for, are as follows:

1. Because the provision contained in the act which authorizes the bonds, requiring the Governor to take possession of the assets of the bank, is a condition precedent to the issuing of the bonds.

2. Because the act is unconstitutional, inasmuch as it does not comply with the requirement of the constitution prohibiting the Legislature from passing acts creating money obligations without, at the same time, laying a tax by which to provide for meeting the same.

3. Because the usual formalities of legislation were not complied with in the passage of the act.

4. Because the act is contrary to the direction of the late Constitutional Convention to the Legislature, to examine into the liabilities of the bank and make provision for the same.

We publish this morning the prospectus of the Southern Land and Settlement Company, which should have appeared in our issue of Saturday.
