A HORRIBLE ACCIDENT

A Negro Torn to Pieces at Seymour's Sawmill

Hilliard Woodard, of Lowell, a colored laborer, met a horrible death this morning at 8 o'clock. The man went to the sawmill of Seymour & Smith, in the northern part of town, to grind his ax on the stone turned with power from the mill. The little belt that ran from the main shaft to the grind stone became detached from the stone and the man, in trying to put it back, caught his hand in the belt, which wound his arm around the shaft, and before the engine could be stopped, although it was only running about a third as fast as usual, the man was whirled around several times and his left arm literally torn out of the shoulder socket, and he was dead in five seconds after he fell to the ground. The body was sent to Lowell for burial. The man's wife cooks for D. W. Davis.
