SARCASM FOR STATESMEN

Some of the Roasts Given Prominent Men by the Members of the Gridiron Club

(New York World.)

Above the tables, as the dinner progressed, floated vari-colored balloons, each representing some presidential boom. The presence of a number of presidential candidates was one of the features of the dinner, and a good deal of fun was directed at them. For instance, the announcement was made that President Roosevelt had issued an order placing the job of president under the civil service rules, and that a civil service examiner was present to conduct the examination. Representatives of the candidates were appointed and put through a severe ordeal to test their knowledge of arithmetic, geography and other studies. For example, one of the questions in geography was:

"How far is it from Danville, Ill., to the White House, as the crow flies?"

"Further," answered the candidate, "than from any other place on earth—except Lincoln, Neb."

"Mr. Bryan," asked the examiner, "please bound the enemy's country."

"I tried to twice," replied Bryan's representative, "but it wouldn't stay bound."

"Mr. Foraker, where do you locate the enemy's country?"

"Home, Sweet Home," answered Foraker's representative, ruefully.

"Turning to history," said the examiner, "state what you know of Lincoln, Judge Gray."

"Lincoln," said the judge's representative, "is a town in Nebraska famous for its heavy exportation of language."

"Did George Washington ever tell a lie, Mr. Knox?" inquired the examiner. "Of course not," responded Knox's representative. "There wasn't any White House to call at when he was alive."

"We will now take up the subject of ancient history," proceeded the questioner. "What was Ananias?"

"Once he was a man," was the answer, "but now he is a legion."

"Mr. Fairbanks, how much is twice two?"

"I must decline to commit myself on that question," replied the vice president's representative, firmly.

"What are the duties of the secretary of the treasury?" was another question.

"To keep his hands off other people's boons."

"Under the head of theology, Mr. Bryan," said the questioner, "what is your estimate of St. Paul?"

"I think that town ought to be wiped off the map," said Bryan's representative, resentfully.

When psychology was taken up the examiner said: "Judge Gray, give an example of a fixed habit."

"William Jennings Bryan," said the judge.

This examination was suddenly ended by the appearance of the double of Senator Bourne, who began delivering his well known argument about the necessity of giving Mr. Roosevelt what Mr. Bourne calls a "second elective term." It effectively broke up the proceedings. Each man whom he addressed picked up his chair and went off with it. Finally, Bourne, finding himself deprived of his audience, picked up a vacant chair and began delivering his argument to it, whereupon the chair walked out of the room all by itself.

Then a fortune teller appeared with a crystal ball, in which he saw many strange things—for instance, the Union Station filled with runners from Vice President Fairbanks, seeking for incoming passengers from Indiana whom the vice president might invite to dinner. He also saw Elihu Root, "who," he said, "would rather make a bright saying than be president."

"Then, why doesn't he," inquired a member.

NEGLECTED COLDS

THREATEN LIFE

(From the Chicago Tribune.)

"Don't trifle with a cold," is good advice for prudent men and women. It may be vital in the case of a child. Proper food, good ventilation, and dry, warm clothing are the proper safeguards against colds. If they are maintained through the changeable weather of autumn, winter and spring, the chances of a surprise from ordinary colds will be slight. But the ordinary light cold will become severe if neglected, and a well established ripe cold is to the germs of diphtheria what honey is to the bee. The greatest menace to child life at this season of the year is the neglected cold. Whether it is a child or adult, the cold slight or severe, the very best treatment that can be adopted is to give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is safe and sure. The great popularity and immense sale of this preparation has been attained by its remarkable cures of this ailment. A cold never results in pneumonia when it is given. For sale by all druggists.
