Thought for the Day
I call that day a perfect day
When love has filled the space
With all the bright and burning ray
Of its idyllic grace.
And whether we have won or lost,
And whether we have gained or sown
Some failure at some awful cost Upon the winds that may have blown,
It shall go down in soul's account
As perfect still, if love was there
To help us from our shadows mount,
And hide us from our mortal care,
A perfect day—a day that gleams
Not only with the light of God,
But one that puts love's light of dreams
Within the bosom of the clod.
