OCALA SOCIAL AFFAIRS

If You Have Any News for this column, Call Two-One-Five

Ocala Social Affairs

Mercy

Commander

In every child’s heart, there is a little boy and a little girl. And the little girl looks up to the little boy, who always seems to know the answer, but who in reality is just too young to know all the answers. Just say your prayers and a little girl will help you. The sun will shine, the wind will blow, and the storm will pass. And the little boy will remember how to be a man.

On the light, beautiful, breeze-blown hill, the little boy’s hands are clasped together in prayer. The little girl is kneeling beside him, her eyes closed. They are praying together, their little hands clasped in the center of their little world. The wind is blowing, the sun is shining, and the birds are singing. And the little boy and the little girl are feeling safe and secure.

The little boy is saying his prayers, and the little girl is saying hers. They are praying for their friends, their families, their schools, and their country. They are praying for each other, and they are praying for everything that makes them happy.

And so it goes, day after day, week after week. The little boy and the little girl are praying together, their little hands clasped in the center of their little world. The wind is blowing, the sun is shining, and the birds are singing. And the little boy and the little girl are feeling safe and secure.

The little boy is saying his prayers, and the little girl is saying hers. They are praying for their friends, their families, their schools, and their country. They are praying for each other, and they are praying for everything that makes them happy. And so it goes, day after day, week after week. The little boy and the little girl are praying together, their little hands clasped in the center of their little world. The wind is blowing, the sun is shining, and the birds are singing. And the little boy and the little girl are feeling safe and secure.

The little boy is saying his prayers, and the little girl is saying hers. They are praying for their friends, their families, their schools, and their country. They are praying for each other, and they are praying for everything that makes them happy. And so it goes, day after day, week after week. The little boy and the little girl are praying together, their little hands clasped in the center of their little world. The wind is blowing, the sun is shining, and the birds are singing. And the little boy and the little girl are feeling safe and secure.

The little boy is saying his prayers, and the little girl is saying hers. They are praying for their friends, their families, their schools, and their country. They are praying for each other, and they are praying for everything that makes them happy. And so it goes, day after day, week after week. The little boy and the little girl are praying together, their little hands clasped in the center of their little world. The wind is blowing, the sun is shining, and the birds are singing. And the little boy and the little girl are feeling safe and secure.

The little boy is saying his prayers, and the little girl is saying hers. They are praying for their friends, their families, their schools, and their country. They are praying for each other, and they are praying for everything that makes them happy. And so it goes, day after day, week after week. The little boy and the little girl are praying together, their little hands clasped in the center of their little world. The wind is blowing, the sun is shining, and the birds are singing. And the little boy and the little girl are feeling safe and secure.

The little boy is saying his prayers, and the little girl is saying hers. They are praying for their friends, their families, their schools, and their country. They are praying for each other, and they are praying for everything that makes them happy. And so it goes, day after day, week after week. The little boy and the little girl are praying together, their little hands clasped in the center of their little world. The wind is blowing, the sun is shining, and the birds are singing. And the little boy and the little girl are feeling safe and secure.

The little boy is saying his prayers, and the little girl is saying hers. They are praying for their friends, their families, their schools, and their country. They are praying for each other, and they are praying for everything that makes them happy. And so it goes, day after day, week after week. The little boy and the little girl are praying together, their little hands clasped in the center of their little world. The wind is blowing, the sun is shining, and the birds are singing. And the little boy and the little girl are feeling safe and secure.

The little boy is saying his prayers, and the little girl is saying hers. They are praying for their friends, their families, their schools, and their country. They are praying for each other, and they are praying for everything that makes them happy. And so it goes, day after day, week after week. The little boy and the little girl are praying together, their little hands clasped in the center of their little world. The wind is blowing, the sun is shining, and the birds are singing. And the little boy and the little girl are feeling safe and secure.

The little boy is saying his prayers, and the little girl is saying hers. They are praying for their friends, their families, their schools, and their country. They are praying for each other, and they are praying for everything that makes them happy. And so it goes, day after day, week after week. The little boy and the little girl are praying together, their little hands clasped in the center of their little world. The wind is blowing, the sun is shining, and the birds are singing. And the little boy and the little girl are feeling safe and secure.