TOO CUNNING

For the Sheriff From Lima. Was an Akron Prisoner.

Sheriff B. H. Bokhart, of Lima, Allen county, came to Akron Friday afternoon to arrest a paper hanger named W. H. Reynolds, who had been indicted by the Allen county grand jury on a charge of embezzlement. He was successful in placing Reynolds under arrest and took him to the Erie depot.

Reynolds acted very friendly with the sheriff, so no hand cuffs were put on him. But while the sheriff was buying two tickets to Lima the prisoner quietly slipped away. Akron policemen scouted last night for Reynolds, but could not succeed in locating him.

BURGLARS

Broke Into Cheese Factory—Visited Tallmadge Homes.

Twenty-five dollars worth of cheese was stolen from the factory of S. C. McNeil at Hawkins Station last Tuesday night.

Burglars also invaded Tallmadge during the week. Three or four houses were broken into and many valuables were carted away. Neither of the robberies were reported to the Akron police.

Going to Encampment.

Buckley Post, G. A. R., is trying to make arrangements by which all its members may attend the National G. A. R. encampment to be held at Philadelphia one week, commencing Sept. 4. There are about 340 persons members of the post.

An agent for the Pennsylvania railroad was in the city today conferring with members of the Post Executive committee in reference to rates and from the encampment.

As yet no rate has been decided upon. A rate of $11.50 for the round trip via Washington, with stop-over privileges, has been offered by the Post. They will, however, try to get better rates.

Two Sides To a Question

Evelyn Carpenter was a girl of decided opinions. One day as she was walking homeward suddenly a flood of sweet song seemed to soothe her ruffled feelings. A hawk imprisoned in a narrow range, poured forth to the heedless world outside its soul of melody through hard bars of wire.

The sense of relief which had stoken over the girl gave place to one of anger, combined with some odd satisfaction. Here at last was an opportunity to do good, even if it were but obtaining the freedom of one poor, hopeless lark. And who more suited to the task than she, the president of the N— Society For the Promotion of Christian Charity Toward Animals? Crossing the road with decided step, she entered a little shop over the door of which the bird sang on. It was a cobbler's workshop. A little, bent old man, with large spectacles on his wrinkled nose and left hand fingers that moved aimably over the rough leather, put aside his work and shuffled forward to the counter. He moved slowly and with difficulty, for his old limbs were getting past their work. Pleasantly, but rather curiously, he looked at her. "Good day," scarce hoping for work in his poor shop from so smart and nicely dressed a lady. Evelyn felt somewhat uneasy at the old man's harmless aspect.

"Is it yours?" she began rather timidly; "is it yours?"

"The cobbler looked at the cage with visible pride. "Yes, miss; my bird sure enough, and a fine bird. Not a better bird in all N—, miss." He rubbed his hands and smiled genially. Evelyn was silent as he continued half to himself, as old men do:

"Four years it is I've had him; four years, and scarce a day off his song. It was my boy's, my Dick's youngest that's gone for a sailor. It seems odd yesterday he came in here, it might have been you, miss, today, with the bird in his hand, and says he—

"But begin your pardon, you was saying."

"What will you take for the bird?" she asked, not feeling quite so sure of her cause now she had actually plunged into the battle.

"I wouldn't sell him, miss. Wouldn't take for him no more than was starting."

Evelyn took out her purse and counted its contents—30 cents. She drew out a quarter, saying in firm and superior tones, "Not a cent more."

The old man looked at her kindly and explained gently, as if to a child it was really very irritating:

"No, miss. I don't want to sell him, I'm saying, you see, he was my lad gone the little bird before he went to sea. No, I'm not likely to part with him for that, dearie," indicating the coin with smiling contempt. "Aye, and him all the chick on his back, I've got since Dick died. It minds me of my lad when I hear him sing so bright. Often when I'm feeling lonesome and low spirited he'll chime in so cheery and set me thinking how my boy's come soon—oh, dear to him, dear! No, you can't have him, but never mind, never mind." He nodded kindly, as if to comfort her in her disappointment.

Evelyn's patience could stand it no longer. "Do you suppose I want to keep the poor bird?" she broke forth. "I want to buy it to give it back its liberty, to let it be free in the woods and the blue sky. Surely you know how very, very cruel it is to confine a creature made to soar and sing at the very gates of heaven in a narrow cage, and to force it to turn."

"This was delivered twenty, being a verbatim quotation from her speech at the opening meeting of the before mentioned society.

"My dear little bird!" she concluded, apostrophizing the unconscious lark.

The cobbler, simple soul, was a good deal taken aback at this convincing tirade. He attempted a defense, however. "You're not misusable, I'm to tell you. Would he sing like that if he weren't happy?"

"Yes," cried Evelyn, "he sings because he longs to be free. That is the song of despair, and not of joy."

The old fellow's face fell. Her eloquence half convinced him. Evelyn felt rather heated, and wanted, she didn't know why, to cry out of the shop.

"Come," she said, "30 cents, and far more than the wretched bird is worth."

"Nay," he said, sadly. "I'm not going to sell you the bird, my friend, to me, and he loves me too, that he does."

"Keep your bird, then," cried the angry reformer. "Keep it, and let it die in its miserable prison. Some day you will regret your miserably." With which grandiloquent threat she departed, with rather more haste than dignity.

That night, getting into bed, Evelyn gave to the cobbler that she had made rather a poor show.

She had also a lurking idea that her motive had not been quite so much the cause of righteousness as the pleasure of reporting progress to her new society. Her passionate words kept recurring to her mind as she lay sleepless half through the night. She wondered if little birds and other creatures were so much wretched, perhaps, in giving pleasure to a lonely old man's declining days the lark might not be unconsciously doing its great maker's bidding in the place for which he intended it. She was so decided, over-zealous to judge so hastily. And, being a thoughtful and conscientious girl, she bravely resolved to go the next morning, humble her pride to the dust, and own herself in the wrong.

About 9 o'clock the next morning, walking with rather a red face up the narrow street, she perceived the old fellow standing at his door with the empty cage in his hand. He was gazing toward the sky, and she saw a tear trickle down his wrinkled cheek. He turned as she approached and smiled mournfully in answer to her inquiring glance.

"Maye you was right, miss," he said; "maybe." He passed into his shop as a sob checked his utterance.

Evelyn turned away abruptly. Never in her life had she been so much ashamed of herself.—Chicago Times-Herald.

NOT MUCH OF AN EATER.

It Took, So He Said, Very Little to Satisfy Him.

Captain B. W. Morgan, every inch a Welshman himself, likes to tell this story when there is another Welshman in hearing: He went home to dinner one day and found a paper hanger at work in the house. He asked the time, and Captain Morgan told him it was noon.

"I guess I'll knock off and go home to dinner then," the paper hanger remarked.

"Stay and eat with us," the captain said, and the invitation was accepted. Captain Morgan was attentive to his guest during the meal. He had a prodigious appetite. The captain help-
