A snake supposed to be at least eight feet and two inches long has repeatedly been seen in the water course that once fed Hoover's dam, and workmen who were employed to deepen and clean out the race are very desirous of obtaining higher wages in consequence.

We hope this explanation may satisfy those who live higher up the stream as to the slow progress of their neighbors below them. It seems to a man up a tree that one little snake ought not to delay the making of that ditch another year.

After taking a few doses I was entirely well of that trouble, and I wish to say further to my readers and fellow-sufferers that I am a hale and hearty man today and feel as well as I ever did in my life.—O. R. Moore. Sold by all druggists. E. Steinbacher & Co., wholesale agents.

Caught by a Clever Doctor.

A certain Dr. Stephen Peabody of Cambridge Court had a fine necktie, so the story goes, and one morning he found that his necktie had all been stolen and the vines piled up near the middle of the yard. But next the head of vines he picked up a gold watch key and a seal. These he laid away, and at the hotel, some three miles distant, he posted a little paper, which read:

NOTICE.

Found, on Thursday last, a little above Cambridge Court, a gold watch key and seal. The owner can have it by proving property and paying charges.

STEPHEN PEABODY.

In a few weeks a stout young man applied for the watch key, reporting himself the unlucky loser. The key and seal were brought forward, and the doctor said: "Is this your property? Will you take your oath that these are your key and seal?"

"Yes, yes; I will do that."

ALMOST A NEW NATION

HOW LOWER CALIFORNIA NEARLY BECAME A REPUBLIC.

Story of a Forgotten Conspiracy. Major Scott and His Donkey Ride. A Sudden Newspaper Exposure and What Followed.

(Special Correspondence.)

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Aug. 30.—Some years ago an American syndicate acquired a tract of about 18,000 acres in the Mexican province of Lower California. The enterprise failed, and some English capitalists gained possession of the property under the name of the International Company of Mexico.

The promoters of the scheme then set about to get their money back. The idea occurred to them that Lower California would make a valuable addition to the territory of the United States. But the matter did not end here. At the very moment the leaders decided to quit the story of the affair leaked out in some way. The editor of one of Mr. Smith's rival newspapers, the San Diego Union, heard of the affair, and one afternoon that sheet came out with an exposure of the whole plot.

As soon as the news became public a great sensation. Not only the conspirators got frightened, except Mr. Smith, who kept at his work in San Diego and took part in the newspaper controversy which followed. He used in his paper the quotation of Ben Hill of Georgia. "The Mexicans are invincible in peace and invisible in war."

This created a sensation, and it was a bold thing to do, considering that many Mexicans are in this city. A crowd from over the border heard of it and challenged Smith to a duel. The conditions of the contest were that the meeting should take place in Mexico, and it was clearly the intention to hang the American as soon as he left his native soil. Smith was not frightened, and he replied to the Mexican in this way: "If you come armed into this office, you will get shot. If I meet you on the street, you will get licked." The crowd kept out of sight.

Among the other leaders of the revolution a panic was created. Major Buchanan Scott was in Ensenada when he first learned of the action of the San Diego Union. The man who nearly missed a generalship immediately got on the back of a mule and started for the land of the free. The major kept running until he reached India. He is now director of the mint in Bombay.

The Mexican government had a fit when it heard of the conspiracy. The late Senor Romero, who at the time there was a clause in the constitution of Mexico which made it a misdemeanor for any one to propose such a measure in the congress of that country.

Thus the early thing to do was to start a revolution and establish a republic as the brave citizens of Texas had done. Then would follow annexation. The members of the English syndicate talked the matter over. They decided to secure the services of a capable man in the United States and finally chose Walter G. Smith. He was at that time the editor of the San Diego Sun and had come out to California for the benefit of his wife's health.

Mr. Smith was induced to undertake the job or at least to investigate and consider the feasibility of the projected revolution. He went to a number of military friends for advice. At the time the only troops in the whole peninsula consisted of a garrison of 100 men. These soldiers were stationed in the capital, the city of Ensenada, and were all convicts who had been sentenced to service in the Mexican army. The commander was General Torres, a most distinguished officer. He also held the office of governor of the province. There were no other troops at his disposal, and he so feared his men that their arms and ammunition were kept in an arsenal about a half mile from the barracks. There were no heavy guns or fortifications about the city.

Along the whole western coast of Mexico the entire naval force consisted of one vessel, the Democra. She was a broken down schooner and of little or no use for either attack or defense. Against this boat the International company could fit out three ships. These were to be converted merchantmen. It was thought that the capital could easily be taken by a sudden night attack, and then the company of 100 convict soldiers would be glad of a chance to escape to the United States.

In case the assault upon Ensenada was successful it was calculated that the Mexican would find it hard to send relief to her captured territory. The three vessels of the republic's navy could head off and possibly destroy any ship chartered by Mexico to carry reinforcements.

There remained but one other way for our southern neighbor to send assistance to her citizens, and this was by marching troops to the scene of disorder. To do this a journey across the desert was necessary, and then Lower California must be reached by crossing the American boundary. It was at the time of the Fenian troubles in Canada, and the refusal of our government to allow English troops to cross our territory was expected to act as a precedent against allowing Mexico the same privilege.

The affairs of the International company were in charge of Major Buchanan Scott of the Royal Engineers. Mr. Smith, who was to be governor general of the republic, went down to Ensenada to look over the ground and discuss affairs of state with the major. They decided that the first move was the announcement of the intention to build a line of railroad from Ensenada to San Quentin. The distance was 100 miles. The latter terminal has a fine harbor, and the purpose to connect the two points seemed natural and in line with the International company's development of the country.

Such an undertaking would lead the people of the province to expect the coming of large bodies of men and the landing of quantities of supplies. The imported laborers were to be disguised soldiers recruited in the United States. The cases and boxes of what appeared to be agricultural implements would be guns and ammunition.

The city of Ensenada was to be surprised. The miserable convict Mexican soldiers would not attempt to defend their country, but would desert. Major Scott, who would become General Scott under the new regime, promised to have the British navy. The Phonograph in Tibet.

The phonograph has been introduced into Lhasa. An instrument was presented by a merchant to the Buddhist chief, who was struck with fright on hearing it declaim a chapter from a holy book. The chief afterward reported to the Buddhist priest, "God in the Flower" which the phonograph records hundreds of times daily for the edification of the faithful.

Acetylene Gets Tired.

One pronounced feature in the use of acetylene gas is its tendency to lose illuminating power when left in reservoirs for several days. A loss is often incurred after a rest of from 12 to 24 hours. Experts call this condition the tiredness of acetylene, but they give no explanation for it, nor do they suggest a practical cure.

Marry and Part For a Year.

Among the many peculiar customs prevalent among the people of Central America is that of parting for one year after the marriage ceremony has been solemnized. This custom has prevailed among the Jarnos from time immemorial. There is no courtship allowed to be carried on between the parties prior to the wedding. When a man selects a woman, he obtains the consent of the parents on both sides, and if this is given they are at once married.

The reason, however, for their not living together as man and wife for one year after marriage is in order to permit of the parties visiting and staying with their respective friends in different parts of the country, which is a customary thing and occupies the time specified. Ninety-nine out of 100 of these marriages turn out well.

Worse Yet.

"That man cheated me out of a cool million."

"Ah! Wouldn't let you marry his daughter, I suppose?"

"No. He let me marry her and does not give us a cent."—Detroit Free Press.

"Due, I suppose, to his habit of taking the floor everywhere he is."—Indianapolis Journal.

You Never Know the Moment When This Information May Prove Invaluable.

It is worth considerable to any citizen of Akron to know the value and use of a medicine, for if there is no occasion to employ it, in the meantime, frail humanity is subjected to so many influences and unforeseen contingencies that the wisest are totally unable to gauge the future. Know then, that Doan's Ointment will cure any case of hemorrhoids commonly known as piles, or any disease of the rectum or skin, generally termed eczema. This is proven by testimony appearing in Akron newspapers and by the reports brought daily to Lamparter & Co.'s drug store by those who are ready to swear to the claims made for this ointment simply because they have incontrovertible evidence to back them up.

Mrs. M. J. Venley, of Mt. E. North says: "I have used Doan's Ointment to remove soreness that I ever used. I had a baled bunton that caused me any amount of suffering. I could hardly get my foot to the floor and every step caused me pain. I used some of Doan's Ointment which I procured from Lamparter & Co.'s drug store and I obtained immediate relief. I tried a great many remedies but nothing equalled Doan's Ointment. Whenever I feel any soreness I always resort to this preparation and it has never failed me. I am not surprised that people are finding out its merits."

Doan's Ointment is for sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Mailed by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S. Remember the name Doan's and take no substitute.
