WILL NOT

Contest Wife's Petition For a Divorce.

Dr. S. H. Sturgeon Makes a Statement Relative to the Action

Mrs. Sarah E. Sturgeon, who resides near Ashland has sued her husband, Dr. S. H. Sturgeon of this city for a divorce. A dispatch from Ashland announced this fact Wednesday and to a Democrat representative Dr. Sturgeon confirmed the report. "I did not exactly desert her, as she alleges," said the genial doctor, "but it is true that we separated in 1882. We were then living in Ada. I shall not contest the case, as it is at my investigation that the action was begun. We could not agree and for business reasons it was necessary that a legal separation be procured. Shortly after we parted in 1882, she sued for alimony. I understand she will again ask for alimony, but the amount I have not heard."

DANGEROUS MAN EATERS.

The African Crocodile is a swift, silent and fatal foe. "The most dangerous foe we have to meet on the Congo," says Stanley, "are the crocodile, the hippopotamus and the buffalo. On my last visit to the Congo three of my men were killed by crocodiles, one by a hippopotamus and one by a buffalo. There are herds of hippopotamuses along the Congo and its tributaries and thousands of crocodiles. The latter are the worst foes, because they are so silent and so swift. You see a man bathing in the river. He is standing near the shore, laughing at you perhaps, laughing in the keen enjoyment of his bath. Suddenly he falls over, and you see him no more. A crocodile has approached unseen, has struck him a blow with its tail and seized him instantly. "Or it may be that the man is swimming. He is totally unconscious of danger. There is nothing to stir a tremor of apprehension, but there in deep water, under the shadow of that rock or hidden beneath the shelter of the trees yonder, is a huge crocodile. It has spotted the swimmer and is watching its opportunity. The swimmer approaches. He is within striking distance. Stealthily, silently, unperceived, the creature makes for its prey. The man knows nothing until he is seized by the leg and dragged under, and he knows no more. A bubble or two indicate the place where he has gone down, and that is all!"

A SONG OF LIFE.

What shall I make of my life, love? What shall I bring to you, Flower of fair color, song of trumpet sweep? Bird that o'er waters of tears on a faithful wing to you Finds her way with a leaf for you to keep? Shall in whose chamber remembered waves shall ring to you Chimes of sleep? Bird that homes to you? Song that will sigh and sing to you? Flower that knoweth not passion or faith or death? Shall that whispers a musical memory out? Nay, I will make of my life two hands to cling to you: Passionate hands, my heart, that shall clasp you and cling to you. Living and dying, daylight and dreaming throughout. —Black and White.

STOOD FOR STONEWALL.

When Jackson Gave an Order, It Was Obedied to the Letter. The following dialogue, current at the time, between one of Stonewall Jackson's soldiers and the provost guard illustrates Jackson's tact at eluding his enemy and also the obedience rendered and the confidence reposed in him by his troops.

The orders read on dress parade the evening before Jackson left the valley to take part in the seven days' fight around Richmond were that in case the army moved before further orders the answer from every soldier to any and all questions except those connected with the army shall be, "I don't know." On the march the provost guard found a soldier in a cherry tree helping himself, when the following took place:

STARTED A PRAIRIE FIRE.

An Army Officer Caused the Worst One Ever Known in Kansas. The greatest prairie fire known in Kansas was in the year 1850, and it was set out by an officer of the United States government.

One day in 1850 he and a party of officers from Fort Hays were returning from a wild turkey hunt in the canyons of the Saline. The wind was blowing a hurricane, and when a stop was made on the high prairie some ten miles north of Hays this officer deliberately touched a match to the dry, crisp grass in order to make a spectacle. When the other officers saw what he was about to do, they made a desperate effort to stop him, but the deed had been done, and the red flames were reeling across the prairie like a frightened antelope. That fire swept from where it had been started clear across Kansas into what is now Oklahoma. The streams and roads offered no obstacles to it whatever. While going south it had also turned to the east and left a trail of ruin across Rice, Reno, Kingman, Harper and other counties. Thousands of settlers were burned out, losing their houses and their feed, their horses and cattle. If the man who set that fire had been known to the settlers, all the troops on the plains would not have been enough to stay their vengeance. As it was, he suffered remorse beyond description. When the officers at Hays would bring him papers, telling of the damage done, he would groan and curse himself roundly. He left Hays for some other post in the following year, and, so far as we know, his name was never connected with the gigantic prairie fire of 1850.—Kansas City Journal.

THE MAN WHO WORKS.

And the Man Who Gets Through Things the Easiest Way He Can. "The man that is so far advanced that he likes the work he is doing," said Mr. Stogdolen, "has reason to feel hopeful of himself. I suppose that the very great majority of us go through the work we have in hand the easiest way we can and get through it, skipping the hard places when possible and thinking we'll be glad when it's finished; but the next job will be just the same. There will be just about so many hard places in it, and then we'll be wishing just the same that we could get through that job. "The fact appears to be that we are always trying to shirk the present job. We mean well in a feasible sort of way, and the next thing we tackle we are going to do right up to the handle, but when we strike that, when that becomes the present work, don't we try to shirk that too? We do, indeed. And that's what we do all through life—daily putting off our best endeavors till tomorrow. Kind of a miserable thing to do, isn't it? "But occasionally you meet a man who puts in his best ticks every day and rejoices in the labor. He doesn't care a continental what the next day is going to bring to him—he can handle it, whatever it is. Just now he's engaged up thoroughly and completely and reaches out the last nook and cranny. He isn't trying to see what he can pass by, but what he can root out, and he goes home satisfied with his work, and he's the one man in a thousand that leads all the rest, and his pay corresponds with his labors."—New York Sun.

Had It All Fixed. The Youth's Companion says that the descendant of a New England Puritan divine has in his possession an old sermon written by his ancestor which shows that the preacher did not trust entirely to the impulse of the moment when delivering his discourses. The manuscript is written in a strange, crabbed hand and plentifully besprinkled with marginal references. "Read slowly here," the minister admonishes himself in one spot, and "to be given out very loud and clear" is the suggestion for another passage. "Hurry a little, with fire," he wrote in several places. The most emphatic and important part of the whole sermon is indicated by a much underlined marginal note.

After hearing stories of this saintly old time preacher it is amusing to know that he deemed it wise and even necessary at the climax of his eloquence to "yell like one possessed."

Philadelphia's Big Clock. The clock on the Philadelphia city hall is the highest in the world. It has the largest dials. If the dials were out of the way and tracks were laid, two trains could pass each other running through the holes. The glass in the four faces is fastened there by a ton of cement. The glass, if laid on the ground, would make a walk a square long and ten feet wide. The minute hand will finish each year's journey by completing a 110 mile trip. It is expected that this minute hand will travel 110 miles annually for many years to come. The clock is strong, and the minute hand is phosphor bronze and weighs 250 pounds.

What shall I make of my life, love? What shall I bring to you, Flower of fair color, song of trumpet sweep? Bird that o'er waters of tears on a faithful wing to you Finds her way with a leaf for you to keep? Shall in whose chamber remembered waves shall ring to you Chimes of sleep? Bird that homes to you? Song that will sigh and sing to you? Flower that knoweth not passion or faith or death? Shall that whispers a musical memory out? Nay, I will make of my life two hands to cling to you: Passionate hands, my heart, that shall clasp you and cling to you. Living and dying, daylight and dreaming throughout. —Black and White.

When Jackson Gave an Order, It Was Obedied to the Letter. The following dialogue, current at the time, between one of Stonewall Jackson's soldiers and the provost guard illustrates Jackson's tact at eluding his enemy and also the obedience rendered and the confidence reposed in him by his troops.

"Who are you?" demanded the guard. "I don't know," replied the soldier. "Where is your command?" "I don't know." "To what command do you belong?" "I don't know." "What are you doing in that cherry tree?" "I don't know." "Are those good cherries you are eating?" "I don't know." "Is there anything you do know?" "Yes." "What is it?" "Well, the last order I had from old Stonewall was that I was not to know anything until further orders, and, gentlemen, I will see you all hanged before I will know anything until old Stonewall takes that order off."—Waco Times-Herald.

Ill tempered young horses delight to attack very young riders and they will kill them if permitted. Mules have the same cheerful habit, unless they are under the influence of "the bell mare." She is the queen of the herd—a kindly creature who has grazed and fed with them, wearing a tinkling bell about her neck. If she snorts defiance of anything, all her followers rush to the attack. If she suffers tolerance, they pass it by. In all things they obey her abjectly.

Back in the old days, when horses and mules throughout the southwest went to market in droves, the rough riding highwayman of that epoch always tried to capture "the bell" and make off with it, knowing that nothing could be done for him following. Similarly, young riders always to save "the bell." She was led, never ridden, so that in event of attack she might be fresh for a game run. A light led her—the owner or chief drover brought up the rear. The lad had strict orders at the first sign of trouble to go his very best, caring for nothing but "the bell."

A Chinese Humorous. Mr. Wu Ting Fang, the Chinese minister at Washington, is a social favorite because of his genial humor and companionable ways. At a little dinner the other night he had to answer a toast. He began with a complimentary allusion to American ways, but said there are a few things about oriental civilization superior to our own. There had been some beastly weather that week, and he turned to Willie Moore, the weather bureau chief, who sat close by. "For instance," he said derisively, "we in China would long ago have cut off this young man's head." It dashed the company for a minute, but they soon grasped the playful allusion to the weather maker and roundly greeted the remark.

The weighing of infants, a part of the routine in children's hospitals and of the greatest value as an indicator of health or disease, is unfortunately not so common as it should be in private families. Dr. Graham, discussing a paper by Dr. Griffith at the Philadelphia Pediatric society, says. "The rate that a child has double its birth weight at the fifth month and triple at from the twelfth to the fourteenth month makes a very good and useful working record."
