

OBITUARY
Ray Gibbs Moody, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Moody, was born in Lafayette, Medina county, Ohio, Sept. 19, 1891, and departed this life May 15, 1917, from Sunny Rest Sanitarium, Colorado Springs. For more than a year he had been suffering from tuberculosis, but the immediate cause of his death was a hemorrhage.

In 1905 he became a member of the Church of Christ in Brunswick. At a later time, when he went to work in Lima, he transferred his membership to that place, where it still remains.

While working in Cleveland, at one time, he joined the Central Y. M. C. A., and was always thereafter an earnest worker in that organization. He was a most earnest Christian, and was never so happy as when endeavoring to lead some one else to Christ.

His mother and father were at his side in his last moments, and at his request sang the songs he had so loved to sing with them on other occasions. The last song they sang to him was that one he had loved so well: "Beautiful Isle," and ere the song was finished his spirit had taken its flight to that "Beautiful Isle," of which he loved to sing.

The letter written to his parents when he feared they might not arrive before the end should come, shows his staunch Christian faith and hope. "Dear Father and Mother," he wrote, "I am writing to tell you, for fear that you may not arrive in time, that I am ready to go. Meet me in Heaven." Another noble soul has gone to share the blessed home prepared for those who love the Lord.

JERSEY CLOTHS STILL HOLD SWAY

All through the spring, one of the materials that has kept steadily increasing in popularity is wool jersey. It has been used for coats and suits, for one-piece dresses, separate skirts and for middie blouses. It has been braided, stitched and even beaded, just like all the other smart materials. Colored beads combined with silk embroidery is the latest form of decoration to which jersey has taken.

As summer approaches, there is not the slightest indication that wool jersey is on the wane. But, on the contrary, one seems to see more and more of it every day. On a dress that could not possibly be too warm for summer, it was combined with dotted crepe in the following manner, pink crepe with white polka dots made the waist and sleeves; the waist extended down the hip line, and from there downward the skirt was of white wool jersey. There was a small yoke of the white jersey at the neck of the dress. This is one of the novel ways in which this popular material is used.

White jersey suits bound with white silk braid or trimmed with black and white check are in very good style at present. They look cool and summery.

All shades of gold and mustard are high in favor and especially so in the jersey cloths. Lavender and purple in jersey cloth are also among the popular colors of the hour.

Gold silk jersey has been combined most successfully with gray wool jersey in some suits and dresses and with dark tan wool jersey in others. This combination of silk and wool jersey is frequently used by the best dress-makers. In some loose-fitting suits, with knee-length coats, the silk is used for the sleeves, sides and back of the coat, and the wool for bands down the front and around the bottom with the simplest of waists having a little fullness at the shoulders with an attractive collar edged with lace or machine picot edging.

Soft pleats finished off with a heading at the top of the skirt are unusually pretty, as shown in the sketch. The puffed pockets are a charming novelty especially suited to this type of summer frock. A long collar of white organdy provides the finishing touch in this dainty hot-weather frock.

It is the collar that makes the blouse in a great many cases. Large cape-like collars falling in points over the shoulders and continuing down the front of the waist are now being worn. A blouse with one of these new collars is illustrated. It is fashioned of white organdy, which is being used a great deal for blouses. The skirt that accompanies this blouse is of one of the smart wool plaids. It has pocket sections at the sides, giving a graceful draped effect.

Plaids are lovely for sports skirts and for other kinds of skirts too. They are worn with short coats of a plain material and with slip-on blouses for sports use.

The New Mannish Shirtwaist

Mannish shirtwaists are growing in favor. Some models of linen are made with finely tucked fronts, like those of a man's shirt. In addition to these tucks, there are little sprays embroidered in colors on some of the waists and turnover collars of pique.

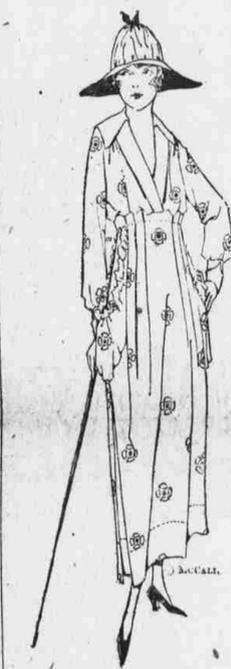

A White Organdy Waist is Smart with a Plaid Skirt

As separate waists and skirts grow more and more important there are always some novelties to be found among them. White tub skirts of cotton gabardine are made with yokes of colored linen, and where the skirt is attached to the yoke there are several rows of machine stitching done in heavy colored cotton the color of the yoke. White skirts with green, blue or orange-colored yokes are quite effective.

A strong military note is observed in suits of mannish cut for women. The coats are short and plentifully provided with pockets like those on a soldier's uniform. These suits are developed in dark blue, and khaki-colored materials. Perhaps the military spirit is also responsible for the combination of blue and red so frequently seen. Blue dresses are embroidered with red beads or red silk, and in some very striking models there are entire sleeves of red with, perhaps, pockets on the skirt showing a bright lining of red. Hats also show the red and blue combination, generally in touches of red on blue straw.

NEW CROPS TO BE TRIED ONLY IN SMALL WAY

Because of increased demands for greater food supply, most farmers this year will devote their main efforts to producing maximum staple crops and trying the newer sorts only in an experimental way. The Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station for many years has tried out many different kinds of crops for conditions obtaining in this State, and has found those of recent introduction and those less commonly grown to be of doubtful value. These specialists say that this season is particularly unsuited for farmers to attempt growing untried crops, but that chief attention should be directed to growing common crops especially for human consumption, such as wheat, corn, potatoes and vegetables.

Invitingly Cool is a Flowered Voile Frock with Soft Pleats and Puffed Pockets

Cool and refreshing summer voiles in dainty flowered effects are charming for the informal cotton frocks, of which every woman requires several for the distressingly hot days. Now is the time to get them made. The styles are generally simple. Pleated tucked or gathered skirts combine
