

Egg Social.

Egg socials are the latest thing out in the home amusement line, and as this is the season of the year when the eggs are young and can be relied upon, we suggest that the same entertainment be adopted by our young folk.

At a mechanical school: "Now, John, did you ever see a saw?" "Yes, sir, I've seen a saw." "What saw was it you saw, John?" "It was a saw-saw, sir."

"Deacon," said a widow, as she heaved a long drawn sigh, and softly raised two tear-bewetted eyes to his, "don't you sometimes have a yearning for the sweet companionship of a kindred soul to share the joys and sorrows that walk, twin like, with us through all the varied scenes of life?"

Improvement for Mind and Body. For genuine merit there is no tonic sold that begins to compare with Parker's Ginger Tonic.

Scene at Continental Kursaal: English party at card table—Hello, we are two to two. English party at opposite table—We are two to two, too.

A gentleman met a rather 'uncertain' acquaintance the other day, when the latter said: "I'm a little short, and would like to ask you a conundrum in mental arithmetic."

The Unknown. It staggered into the Third District station last night. A fine plug hat rested upon his head. A pair of kid gloves covered a delicate pair of hands, and a heavy watch chain dangled from a vest.

'What do you want?' the sergeant asked. 'Want to be locked up.' 'What for?' 'General demoralization.'

'What will we look you up on? Have you done anything?' 'Lock me up on general principles. Never did anything in my life and never will. I'm a gentleman.'

The sergeant said he couldn't lock him up. 'Why not?' the man asked. 'Because you've done nothing.'

'All right then. Wait till you see the morning papers with something thus: 'Bathed in Blood—Gore in a Graveyard.' I'm going to commit a double suicide, and don't you forget it.'
