Twelve Englishmen in every 10,000 die of gout. Australian tribes are known by the shape of their boomerangs. The Swiss floral pet is the edelweiss, the name meaning "noble white."

Ninety per cent of the cigars made in Germany sell for 1 cent or 1 1/2 cents each. In an Oregon mountain a seam six feet wide and one-eighth of a mile long has been opened.

It is a consolation when another man is in trouble to think that it will prove a valuable lesson to him. The first Biblical mention of brickmaking is in Genesis. The chronologists place the date of this reference at B. C. 2247.

A humorist says that the best men to send to war are lawyers, because their changes are so great that no one can stand them. It was a member of parliament who said, "You may depend upon it, the pale face of the British soldier is the backbone of the Indian army."

The man who had the popcorn concession at the World's fair has confessed that he made enough out of it to erect a fine row of flats in Chicago.

The first and only poet to receive an autograph letter from a pope was Chialari, and the letter was written by Urban VIII at the time when the pope wrote only to kings.

The manuscript of Johnson's notes for the "Life of Pope" is in the British Museum and shows that Johnson very carefully thought over a subject before writing a line.

Pope would often rouse his attendant and have pen and paper brought to him in the middle of the night that he might not lose some couplet that had just occurred to him.

Fleeting often made a jest of the poor reception met with by his works. On the title page of one of his comedies he says, "It is printed not as it was acted, but as it was damned."

Pope was keenly sensitive to criticism, whether just or unjust, and was repeatedly made ill by the attacks of his literary enemies. Most of them are mentioned by name in the "Dunciad."

Rymer, the collector of the British "Frodo," the greatest historical work up to his time, was imprisoned for debt. Ockley, the orientalist, wrote most of his works on Saracenic history in jail.

Milton's comparison of Satan with the rising sun, a passage found in the first book of "Paradise Lost," nearly occasioned suppression of the poem. The comparison was supposed to contain a political and treasonable allusion.

Aristotle was a small man, with a horse voice and thin legs. He starved and was ill at ease in company. He dressed magnificently, was fond of jewelry and so extravagant in his pleasures that he wasted his fortune on female favorites.

Artistic Posters in France. The two forms of advertising that the French excel in are posters and window displays. The good taste exhibited in these two directions makes a walk along their streets a delight and an art treat.

The Parisian poster owes its attractiveness to bold drawing and subtle, though oftentimes startling, handling of color. No matter what the article advertised, a girl's figure is invariably introduced. Usually the size of the poster is large, but never is it attempted to portray a complicated design.

A broad, sketchy effect and a dazzling scheme of color are relied upon to do the business. The best artists do not disdain to design for the lithographer. In the window of a small art store on the Boulevard des Capucines, I noticed the original of a poster that had been used for the Molin Rouge. I was curious to know how much such a thing could be worth after duplicates had been on every dead wall in Paris.

The price was 1,800 francs ($240), but it bore the signature of Chereau, the acknowledged master of the poster art in France. Each example of his work that issues from the lithographing press is worth more than is asked for a copy of a high class magazine. There are even places in Paris where collectors buy posters, and the best examples cost from 3 francs (60 cents) up. Posters without the lettering are still more highly esteemed and about 10 times as much. Rare examples frequently command fancy prices. Chereu, Guillaume, Frimont, Camis, Chouveau, Favis, Verneau, etc., are the best known designers, and the connoisseur looks for the signature on a street advertisement as naturally as he would for the artist's name on the painting hung at the salon. No better example could be given to the extreme to which this art has been carried abroad than the poster exhibition which is now being held in Brussels. A special building is given up to it, and people pay their admission fee, wander about through the various rooms and study the different examples critically, just as we should do at an exhibition of the Water Color society in New York.—Printers' Ink.

Dummies in the Band. Quartermaster Lieblich of the Fifth regiment made a discovery once and has been careful ever since whenever he has occasion to engage a band to play martial music for the gallant boys in blue. "I wanted to engage a brass band," said he, "and there was a certain rivalry among the boys that made it difficult to reach a conclusion. I finally made up my mind and engaged a certain band, and the next day the bandmaster of the rival organization said to me, 'You watch your band tomorrow and see that they don't ring in any dummies on you.' I didn't know what the man was talking about, so I asked him to explain, and he did. A light then dawned upon me, for he gave me the snap deliberately away, that while leaders of certain bands collect so much per man from the people that engage them they frequently ring in people in the band that don't know a bar of music from a bar of soap. They just simply walk along with the rest of the players and nobody is any the wiser. The next day the parade took place, and I followed the advice of the other leader and watched my band carefully. It didn't take long to pick out the two dummies. They just strolled along with the brass instruments at their mouths and acted as though they played without inflicting their cheeks. We had to pay for those fellows $3 apiece just the same."

"And what did you do?" "I asked the leader to tell the two dummies to play solos."

"And they did?" "Not by a jugful. He simply said that wasn't in the contract, and he refused to do it. I have had my eyes opened since, and you may rest assured they don't ring in any more 50 cent dummies on me and charge me $3 for them."—Cleveland World.

A TALE OF THE FRENCH LEGION.

Romantic Life of an Officer Who Mysteriously Disappeared in 1884. "Who has not heard of the French Foreign Legion? Its very name sounds martial and romantic. It recalls stories more exciting and interesting than those of modern novels. It is the one thing we have left, service in which can be likened unto that of the middle ages, so far as an adventure and romance are concerned."

The speaker was an old French officer who recently returned to this city from Marseilles. Two sabres cut across his forehead and a little cross worn on his breast told with sufficient eloquence of a glorious past. The colonel went on: "There was a trial before the council of war in Marseilles a few weeks ago, the story of which has excited great interest in France. It is the tale of a deserter."

About eight years ago a handsome man appeared at the recruiting station of one of the border French towns and asked to be enrolled as a private in the Foreign Legion. He said that he was a Swiss and gave the name of Ruchonnet. He was sent to Tonquilly where he conducted himself most bravely. His company was one day ordered to take a fort strongly armed and defended by 800 Chinese. Ruchonnet, whose history, according to custom, had not been investigated, had become a corporal in the mountains. In the assault the captain and lieutenant were killed, but Ruchonnet stopped to the front, waved his sword apparently in the very face of death and called to his men to follow him. A few minutes later he was seen to enter the gate of the fort, and then he was master of 300 captives. He was badly wounded, but soon recovered to receive the thanks of his superior officers and to be promoted to the rank of sergeant. He continued to distinguish himself and in 1887 became adjutant of his regiment and was decorated with the military medal.

"After a stay of three years in Tonquilly his detachment was ordered to Algiers in 1890, where Ruchonnet continued to distinguish himself by exemplary conduct. He was looked upon as one of the coming men of the legion. "One day he went to his colonel and declared that he had a confession to make. 'Ruchonnet is not my name,' he began to the astonished colonel. 'I am Camuzet, formerly marshal of armories and chief of artillery. I was condemned in 1884 by the Fifteenth Army corps to 30 years of hard labor for wrongs in my military administration. I fled to Switzerland, remained there some time, and then, wishing to rehabilitate myself, assumed the name Ruchonnet and enlisted in this legion in a small border town where no one knew me. That is my story.'

"I have committed a grave mistake, but I have done it to make it good by shedding my blood for my country." "His case was won, and the eloquent defense of his advocate, M. Demange, was unnecessary. The court acquitted him, and as Camuzet he will return to Algiers to take up his duties."—New York Tribune.

An Optical Illusion. If you want a good ending to a little party, take all the guests into the dining room and turn on the gas. Make them all sit around the table, in the middle of which place a soup plate. In the soup plate put some common salt and a little alcohol. Light the alcohol, and then look at each other's faces. They will look natural at first, but as the alcohol burns out and the salt becomes ignited the flame changes from yellow to blue, and the changes in the faces are very startling. They all take a ghastly look. Eyes stick out, and the skin looks as though drawn tight like parchment. Then the faces become almost black, and when the flame dies out and you go out into a lighted room, you unconsciously try to wipe the black off. But it doesn't. It's all the light from the salt.—Hartford Post.
