

A MAIDEN'S LIPS.

One day when Mother Nature Was in a pleasant mood She called her Youth and Health...

SHE WAS PRETTY.

I had stated my intention of going to see Miss Kitty clearly, but in doing so I had no very fixed idea...

I determined to retire to my hammock and think over matters in general. As I lay there, swinging lightly...

Old half forgotten recollections came thronging upon me; of little fawn haired Kitty, whom I used to torment...

And I, engrossed in turning over money in the city, had clean forgotten all about her!

I was aroused by the sound of voices and looked round. There, in the very identical place where Mr. Bob Tycker had done his extremely futile fishing...

And so the old fellow—and a queer old fellow he is, too. Mr. Bob was saying, "will be round at the house this very afternoon to see about claiming your hand."

"Oh, Bob!" said Kitty, trembling. "I say, Kitty," said Bob, musingly...

"Oh, Bob, don't," said poor Kitty. "He has been such a bugbear to me lately—that—that there is a danger of a young lady shedding tears at the very mention of his name."

"I thought to myself grimly, for Kitty did not seem to be able to complete the sentence herself."

"Never mind, Kitty," said poor Bob, hugging her tenderly. "I am a brute to have suggested such an idea. If he doesn't refuse to have you, why will you just have to refuse him, you know, and that will bring the whole matter to the usual way of doing things, from a young lady point of view, you see."

"So it will," said Kitty, brightening up once more; "but, Bob, then the $25,000 will have to go to the Methodist chapel, and that is just the very thing that has been making uncle so terribly savage."

"Let him be," said Bob stoutly. "It won't hurt us after today; you will be free then, you see, and marry whoever you like. And we have plenty to set up housekeeping on between us, without the beastly money—let him be angry if he likes."

"And so he is, sir," shouted Mr. Dobson suddenly, poking his head over the top of the bank. "So he is! It would make a saint savage to be set at defiance in this way. I begin to think!"

"Stop!" I called out, rising hastily in my hammock. "Splish! Somebody had fallen into the water."

Me, by Jove, and so I began striking out lustily on all sides, with hands, feet, fingers, elbows—I cannot exactly call myself a swimmer—and getting my boots above water more frequently than my head. I am afraid, till I was suddenly grasped by the collar firmly.

"Keep cool," said my young friend Bob Tycker authoritatively—for he it was—nimbly swimming on his back with two legs and one arm, and drawing me after him with the other. "Keep cool; I've got you all right!"

"Cool it is!" I thought to myself, my spirits reviving as I felt myself towed along—right across the river! For Bob, it seems, like a retriever—he certainly swam as well as any—would not condescend to lay me anywhere but at the very feet of his mistress.

"There at last! hurra!" An overwhelming rush of water across my face cut short my self congratulation; I was fairly under, in fact. And the remarkably unpleasant thought flashed upon me that I was driving down under the dipping bush. But a spasmodic jerk from Tycker brought me to the top once more, and as I gasped for breath I heard his voice: "Shift for yourself—catch hold of the bush—I'm going!"

I caught the branches as high up as possible and got a glance behind me. Tycker was not only gone—he was gone, diving down under the bush, having sacrificed himself to keep me from a like fate.

I saw his face disappearing beneath the water; I heard the despairing cry of Kitty from the bank, and letting go of my own hold with one hand, I thrust down and caught the remarkably wild eye to the on-lookers.

"The old gentleman was hallooing me, and I was rapidly understanding from her waist that heavy scarf of gold which she had worn all day. Then, like a flash of fire in the sunlight, one end leaped out at me. Well thrown! The embroidered fringe fell across the branches and over my wrist. Quick as thought I had quitted my useless clutch on the yielding twigs, and with a convulsive leap in the water had got a double turn of the scarf about my wrist.

Of course I went under, but with a mind fully made up upon two points—that nothing but death should tear me from my hold upon that scarf—of course not—and that if over I was to be pulled out alive Tycker should come too.

I don't know how long I held my breath—an age, I fancy, and then a rush of fire swept across my vision. I was gone—it struck me forcibly—burning, exhilarating sensation in my throat, and the sound of a voice speaking, as it seemed, many miles away.

The voice drew close to me at a bound, and opening my eyes I saw some one stooping over me, brandy flask in hand and an expression of horror on his face. That expression instantly vanished as he caught my gaze.

"This one is all right, Kitty; he is coming round fast. Here, take the flask and give Tycker some more brandy! Cheer up; he will be all right in a minute."

Some suspicious sounds in my immediate neighborhood caused me to turn my head feebly in the direction whence they were proceeding, and then I knew everything.

Of course! We had been in the river and had been pulled out again! For there, on his back, even as I lay on mine, lay Mr. Bob Tycker, and on her knees beside him, bending low over his face, was Miss Kitty Dobson. And the golden scarf—suddenly changed for the worse—lay midway between us.

One glance was sufficient to assure me that Mr. Bob Tycker was nearly as far advanced on the road to recovery as I was myself, and that Miss Kitty held a most exalted opinion of his late exploit. But the old gentleman's face grew cloudy as he looked at it. He leaned over me in irritated silence, brandy flask in hand, and I thought it was time to speak.

"How are you, Dobson?" I said, with a faint smile. "I am afraid you don't recognize me in this draggled condition, but..."

"Why, so it is!" exclaimed the old gentleman. "It's Mildenhall! Why, how do you come to be down here? I say," he continued in a sort of stage whisper, and with a troubled look at the others, "I am very glad you have come. I'm half afraid, as it is, you are too late."

The Pillow Nuisance. "I happened to be in Kansas City while a convention was on," said F. S. Nies, "and owing to the crowded condition of the hotels was compelled to double up with a stranger. He was a very pleasant man of German descent and did nothing erratic until he went to bed. Then he removed the covers from the legs at the head of the bed, so as to make it lower than the foot, placed his pillows with his head at the door of the bed lower than his feet. He slept the sleep of the just and had to be called half a dozen times in the morning. We went down to breakfast together, and I ridiculed him for his peculiar sleeping posture. He quoted some German scientist with a five syllable name as his authority, and so convinced me of the fact that it is entirely a mistake to suppose that pillows and bolsters are necessary that I discarded both and found to my surprise that he was right. The discovery was a revelation to me, but it is certain that to some people at least a pillow in a nuisance instead of a comfort if they only knew the fact."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.
