PICKETT AND THE ARCHIVES.
The Light Turned on a Hidden Chapter of Wartime History.

Frank Riggs, the son of the famous banker and his father's successor in the financial circles at Washington, tells an interesting story that corrects a false impression which many good people have carried for years.

During the second term of President Grant a man of the name of Pickett sold to the government of the United States the records of the executive departments of the southern confederacy.

From these documents was obtained much evidence that prevented the payment of claims of southern citizens who pretended loyalty for losses growing out of the war.

In a single instance they saved several millions by showing that mail contractors throughout the south had been paid from the Confederate treasury for services performed by them for the postoffice department of the United States before the outbreak of the rebellion.

They proved to be of great value in many other directions, and the price paid Mr. Pickett for them, which was something like $60,000, proved to be one of the most profitable investments ever made by the government.

Pickett had been the chief clerk of the Confederate state department or held some similar office which made him custodian of the archives. When President Davis and his cabinet fled from Richmond, Mr. Pickett carted the records away and hid them in some place that escaped the searchers of the Union army, and the manner of their disappearance was a mystery until they were delivered to Secretary Fish.

It was always believed that Mr. Pickett pocketed the money, and he was universally condemned by southern people for betraying the secrets of the lost cause for a price.

"The facts have never been told," said Mr. Riggs, "for Mr. Pickett exacted the strictest pledges of secrecy from my father in regard to the disposition of the money. But both of them are dead now, and there is no reason why the truth should not be known. Mr. Pickett never had the benefit of one penny of the money he received from the government for these records. He deposited the entire amount as soon as he received it in our bank to the credit of 'George W. Riggs, trustee for' and it was distributed in small amounts among the widows of Confederate officers. Mr. Pickett made out the list of the people to whom he wished it sent. The checks were all signed by my father. Each one was accompanied by a letter, which he prepared and which my father signed, saying that the inclosure was forwarded at the request of a gentleman who felt an interest in their welfare, but for reasons of his own desired that his identity should not be disclosed. The account was carried for several years, and all the checks and vouchers are now packed away in our bank."—Chicago Record.

PREMONITIONS OF DEATH.
Soldiers Who Have Gone Into Certain Battles Perfectly Conscious of Their Fate.

"Soldiers had strange premonitions of death before going into battle during the war," said an old soldier. "I can't tell you how many times I have seen my comrades foretell their death. They seemed to feel it was coming and went into battle fully prepared to meet their end. So common was this, and so regularly did death follow when foretold, that I often heard officers upbraiding their men for speaking of death, remarking: 'A man never speaks of a fear of death without death following shortly after. It's like the smallpox; the one that dreads it most is sure to be the first victim.' But the officers were reasoning backward. In all the cases I saw the prediction of death was caused by an inward feeling, telling that his end was near."

"It wasn't fear, for I remember 'Boss' McKellar, as we used to call him, who came from Butler county. He had been a brave soldier, serving his full three years, never once failing in his duty. The day before his three years were up he went into the battle of the Wilderness. He was so pale and careworn and lacked so much the usual vigor with which he entered battle that some of his friends remarked how changed he was. He looked like a ghost and was trembling all over. They asked him what was the matter. 'Why,' he replied, 'my three years are up tomorrow, but I'll never see my service out. I will be killed in this battle—that I know.' "His friends tried to cheer him up, telling him that it was only a morbid fancy, but no amount of talk could enlighten him. He went into the battle and was among the first to fall, being hit squarely in the forehead. I also remember John Dunbar sitting eating crackers with an officer before a campfire on the eve of battle. He had a sad expression when he turned, and breaking the cracker in his fingers said in a contemplative manner, 'Well, boys, this is my last night on earth.' In the dim firelight I saw the big tears well up as the

EXAMINER'S REPORT.

TO THE HON. PROBATE JUDGE—SIR:
By authority derived from you, officially bearing date the 3rd day of Sept., '94, and after being duly sworn according to law, we, W. F. Duffy and C. F. Wilson, as examiners, without previous notice or intimation to the County Treasurer, or any other person, of such intention, forthwith entered into the county treasury and presented our authority aforesaid to the county treasurer, demanded the keys to the vaults and safes, and proceeded immediately to count the moneys therein, and inspect and examine the books, records and vouchers thereof, together with all other property which should be in the custody of the treasurer. We then proceeded forthwith to the office of the county auditor, and ascertained how much money the county treasurer should charge with on the auditor's books, also the exact amount of money, property, bonds, securities, assets and effects that should be in the treasury, and the amount belonging to each particular fund. In compliance with the law requiring certificates of such examination, we hereby certify that Ninety seven Thousand, Six Hundred and Twenty two $2-10/100 dollars, ($97,622.50) was the exact amount of money so found and counted in the county treasury, and that the statement annexed, which agrees with the books of the Auditor, presents the exact balances and overpayments in such fund, and the amount of property then in the custody of the Treasurer.

Respectfully submitted,
W. F. DUFFY,
C. F. WILSON,
