

TITANIC'S LOOKOUT HAD NO GLASSES

WITNESS SAYS THERE WERE NO BINOCULARS IN CROW'S NEST TO SEE THE ICEBERG.

By James J. Montague.
Washington, April 24.—A pair of marine binoculars, costing at the most $50, would have saved the lives of the 1,635 men, women and children who perished when the Titanic went down.
"They told me they wouldn't buy any glasses," testified Lookout Fleet, who sighted the iceberg from the crow's nest of the doomed vessel, when he was asked about them before the special senate committee.
"If we had them we could have seen the berg quite a bit sooner—time enough to have cleared it."
Glasses for Voyage.
Fleet said that he had always had glasses on the Oceanic, poor ones, but of sufficient power to be of help in seeing ahead. Glasses had been furnished the lookout till the ship left Southampton. Then when they asked for them they were told that there were none, and would be none for the voyage.
Fleet's story, together with the dreadful narratives of Maj. Arthur Peuchen, a passenger, and Third Officer Pittman gave Mr. Ismay rather an uncomfortable day. But he sat stolid and unmoved throughout them all, and even when Peuchen and the officer told of the awful chorus of cries and moans that went up when the Titanic sank and continued growing fainter and still more faint for more than an hour while the other lifeboats lay still or pulled away, the chief officer of the Titanic remained, to all appearances, unaffected.
Tells of Seeing Iceberg.
Fleet, the lookout, is a dull and unpossessing British seaman. His very dullness undoubtedly assisted the truth about the company's parsimony to come out. He told of sighting the iceberg, so far away that it seemed no larger than a table. Bigger and bigger it grew as the ship rushed up on it till at last when, despite the swing to port that followed his warning to the bridge the starboard bow crashed into it. It stood full 50 feet out of the water, high enough to send a shower of ice down on the deck. The glasses that were denied him, he said, would have enabled him to see it "quite a bit earlier." As it was, he had barely time to sound his warning. Hardly had the words "thank you" come back from the bridge to the crow's nest than the ice was tumbling aboard and the submerged frozen feet were tearing a great gaping hole in the vessel's bilge.
Pittman, who preceded Fleet on the stand, and Major Peuchen, who followed him, both told in different ways the story of the terrible cries of distress that came across the water when the Titanic finally disappeared.
Pittman was calm and master-of-fact. One of the lifeboats fell to his charge, a boat loaded with women. He got her safely away from danger of the ship's suction, then lay on his oars as she went down.
Moans and Cries.
First there were loud screams, and cries for help, that gradually became unintelligible, dying away into a continuous chorus of low moans. For an hour these continued, while the women in Pittman's boat sat frozen with horror. There was room in the boat for more, 15 more, at least. Some of those who were struggling in the icy sea might have been taken aboard, but Pittman made no effort to go back for them.
When at length, after more than an hour, the last faint moaning had died altogether away the men in the boat again bent to the oars and the boat moved out blindly over the water till dawn and the lights of the Carpathia were sighted almost together.
Major Peuchen told the same story of the cries, "the dreadful cries and moans," he called them. A little while before a call had come from the ship. But Hitchens, the quartermaster, refused to go back.
"It is our life, now, not theirs," he said.
Brutal Quartermaster.
Some of the women pleaded with them, "Our husbands are on the ship, we cannot leave them. Please go back," they begged. "There's nothing there but a lot of stiffs," said Hitchens brutally, and refused to bring the ship about.
This quartermaster, who Peuchen said was utterly unfit for his position, refused to take an oar, or to perform any service but sit at the helm. Peuchen said Hitchens swore horribly all the time, and was unutterably brutal to the women.
Asked why he did not interfere, Peuchen said: "He was a large, powerful man. I could not reach him from where I was without a struggle. I had had a row with him once. I thought it better not to talk to him."
Peuchen said that he was surprised that there were so few men aboard to man the boats. "If they were there they were not at their stations," he said. "I had supposed that there would have been a drill or something of the kind, but I saw none. I judge it was what is called a 'scratch crew,'"

Constipation brings many ailments in its train and is the primary cause of much sickness. Keep your bowels regular, madam, and you will escape many of the ailments to which women are subject. Constipation is a very simple thing, but like many simple things, it may lead to serious consequences. Nature often sends a little assistance and when Chamberlain's Tablets are given at the first indication, much distress and suffering may be avoided. Sold by all dealers.

Manner and Customs.
The manners of some people encountered in taking walks abroad are suggestive of the report made by the old British sea captain who was sent out to investigate the manners and customs of the inhabitants of a newly-discovered Pacific island. His report was brief, as follows: "Manners they have none, and their customs are beastly."

NATION'S LAWMAKERS

Washington, April 24.—The senate, by a vote of 42 to 36, refused to recede from its amendment to the joint resolution providing for the direct election of senators and the measure was sent back to the house. The amendments retain to congress the supervisory power over election, which the resolution would give to the states.
The whole time of the house was occupied by the debate on sections of the postoffice appropriation bill affecting the postal savings and the rural delivery services.
Representative Norris of Nebraska introduced a resolution calling on the president for the production of all papers in the charge of them, Judge Robert W. Archbald of the United States commerce court.
Representative Moore of Pennsylvania introduced a resolution asking the secretary of commerce and labor for a list of piers owned or controlled by foreign steamship companies.
Dr. Harvey W. Wiley appeared before the committee on interstate commerce and urged more stringent pure food legislation.
The Henry resolution giving the committee on banking and currency enlarged powers in the proposed money trust legislation was favorably reported by the rules committee.
picked up for the voyage, and unfamiliar with the boat, even if sufficient in number.
He said that no general alarm was sounded to his knowledge.
The shock of the collision was like that of a great wave striking the vessel. But he knew that the night was calm, and went on deck to see what had happened. He found ice in quantities about the forward deck. Later the list of the vessel disturbed him, and then going to the boat deck for the first time, he read in the horrified faces of the passengers who had gathered there that the ship was in grave danger.
Peuchen's first effort was to round up his friends. He succeeded in finding a few of them. Most of these afterward went down with the vessel.

AGED MAN AND GIRL ELOPE

Couple on Their Way to Church to be Married Are Arrested on a Lackawanna Train.
Scranton, Pa., April 24.—On their way to Brick church, where they were to be married, James Leary, 60, and Irene Lunn, 16, were arrested on a Lackawanna train here. Leary was fined and allowed to go, but the girl was given to the custody of the Associated Charities.
The couple are residents of Nichols, N. Y. When Leary's wife died a few months ago he came to live with the Lunn and formed a deep attachment for the girl. She reciprocated and they planned to elope.

BUCKEYE MAN IS FLEECE

Ohioan, Who Is Now Physical Wreck, Loses Two Thousand Dollars at Detroit Gambling Tables.
Detroit, April 24.—That E. S. Gardner of Painesville, O., lost $2,000 at Detroit gambling tables, and a like amount in the same manner in Chicago, became known when his son engaged Attorney Louis McClair to look after his interests.
The father is at present in St. Joseph's retreat, in Dearborn, Mich., a physical wreck following in three weeks' delirium, and the Detroit police are searching for "eard sharks" who are said to have got more than $2,000 of Gardner's money here.

Pupils Must be Vaccinated.

Dayton, O., April 24.—The fight against compulsory vaccination reached a head here with the declaration of Dr. C. L. Patterson, health officer, that students in the newly formed private school would have to submit to vaccination. The school was organized for children who were not allowed in the public schools because of their parents' refusal to permit them to be vaccinated.

Quadruplets Are Born.

Alpena, Mich., April 24.—Four children, two boys and two girls, were born to Mrs. E. Wenecki, who lives at Posen.

Mrs. Edw. Cramer, No. Jackson, Ohio, Says That Foley's Honey and Tar Compound Has Been Her Faithful Friend for Many Years.

"We rely upon it for quick relief from coughs and colds, and it never fails. It has saved one son's life, I am sure. He had a dreadful case of asthma, and we thought he would surely die of strangulation. Foley's Honey and Tar Compound completely and absolutely cured him." F. A. Morris.

WELL PUT TOGETHER

MOST EFFECTIVE COMBINATION IN COSTUME.

Fashionable Lines Make Design Most Becoming to the Average Figure—Buttons a Feature of the Entire Scheme.

In this costume the coat combines rather cleverly the fashionable high waist-line and the plain panel front, whose lines being continued unbroken on the skirt, make the whole thing doubly becoming to the average figure, while, then, the smart buff and black coloring of the striped cloth will be further set off by those touches of black on lapels and cuffs, and again by the under-lining of the loosely-hanging skirt panel at the back. Buttons, both large and small, also figure in the scheme, and a flatly tied bow of black satin as a finish for the white lawn cravat is a final detail, it being further advisable that a bow of similar shape, but larger size, be also in evidence on the shoes.

CHARMS THE BLUES AWAY

Girl Has Found That a Little Tidying Up Marks End of Feeling of Depression.
"What do you do?" asked the clinging vine girl, "when something upsets your nerves and you can't do anything to right the trouble itself, but have to wait? To me waiting in suspense is the hardest kind of strain, but reading or embroidering is impossible to me at such times."
"And to me," admitted her friend, "But I found a help long ago in a dear, quaint old book belonging to my grandfather. It was 'The Recreations of a Country Parson,' and one of the charming, grandfatherly essays lauded the practice of tidiness as the greatest possible promoter of cheer when one happened to feel depressed. According to his philosophy, weeding a bit of neglected garden or putting a set of bureau drawers in order, or a little task of the sort, would act like a charm."
"So next time I had to wait, not knowing whether I might not have word of a serious disaster at any minute, I set myself steadfastly at bringing order out of a little chaos—otherwise the play room closet. I put my mind on it so closely for the time that it had no chance to wander off to the possible evil, and held it there until every inch of the place was tidy and ready for the children to take possession again. And the sun came out while I was doing it and the premonition of evil had quite vanished."

Tortoise Shell Combs.

Coffure fashions are causing women to bring forth old shell combs and pins that have been laid away for years.
While these may be good in line they are apt to be dull and of cloudy appearance.
If very bad they should be sent to a jeweler or manufacturer of shell goods for repolishing.
To brighten at home rub with sweet oil, wipe dry, cover with whitening or a good silver powder and polish with a chamolis.
To keep shell in good condition wash it frequently with tepid water, then polish with a little olive oil on a piece of flannel or chamolis.
As shell is brittle, it should be carefully handled, especially not subjected to sudden changes of temperature.
When not sure if your shell is real, do not put it too near a flame, as it may be celluloid and explode.

The Train Has Come.

The train has evidently come to stay. It appears in many variations, the pointed train and fish-tail style being most in evidence, although the graceful round train is seen occasionally. A three-inch band of skunk fur or brown fox is used to trim the lower edge of many of the new gowns of embroidered chiffon, brocaded satin, or velvet, a narrow band of the same fur also finishing the sleeve.—Harper's Bazar.

R. J. Howell, Tracy, Ohio, in giving particulars of his wife's recent illness writes:

"Her case was the worst I have ever seen, and it looked like consumption. Her lungs were sore and she coughed almost constantly, and sometimes fairly strangled. Her voice was hoarse and weak and she talked in a whisper. Foley's Honey and Tar Compound gave her relief at once, and less than three bottles effected a complete cure." F. A. Morris, Canfield.

Reason Enough.

"I wonder why a rooster crows?" "Because he is not a hen I reckon."
