Death of Walter C. Taylor

When the startling news reached here last week Thursday forenoon that Walter C. Taylor, aged 65, had been killed the day previous in a wreck on the Burlington railroad at Wakely, Wyoming, no details were given...

At the inquest the "Coroner's" jury holds eastbound engineer responsible for worst railroad disaster in history of Sheridan division.

As to the manner of Walter Taylor's death and funeral, we take the following extracts from the copy of the Post sent us:

Taylor and Hart, route agent for the Adams Express company and Burlington freight car driver, were riding together near the middle of the car. When he felt the jar of the brakes Taylor rose from his seat and walked to the opposite side of the car...

Hart remained in his seat and while crushed in his seat and while crushed in his seat and while crushed in his seat...

Funeral services will be held at the First Congregational church tomorrow over the remains of W. C. Taylor, who was killed in the wreck.

Deceased has a remarkable record, having entered the express service with the Wells-Fargo company 25 years ago and been with the Adams for 10 years...
