Mystery surrounds the death of Roy Fox, 18 years old, son of Robert Fox, of Rootstown, near Ravenna, whose body was found by his father and neighbors late Sunday night. Young Fox, James Leroy and son Bernard started to the home of Wilbur S. Bissell, railroad section foreman, earlier in the evening when Bissell's young son and daughter are said to have told them their father was trying to kill their mother. They met Bissell, who took the children home and then returned to his callers, who fled in different directions. Leroy and son went home, but young Fox failed to appear and later was found dead in a field by a fence. He was lying on his back. Bissell, who admitted to Sheriff Jones of Ravenna and others that he threw a stone at the men, but which, he says, struck a barn, is in jail at Ravenna pending the Coroner's inquest.

He was visiting relatives here, having made the trip to Lisbon on his motorcycle, in the running of which he is an expert, having won a number of races. It is said that he was giving an exhibition of the speed of his machine, when he struck some obstruction which upset the motorcycle and hurled Mr. Carlisle 72 feet through the air. He struck the ground face down and was picked up unconscious. His face was battered and cut and there were bruises on his body. The distance was measured by a number of persons from where the machine fell to the point where Mr. Carlisle was lying. Dr. Nevin was called and while he found the young man badly hurt, there were no bones broken and his injuries are not considered dangerous. The machine was not badly damaged.

THE RED HAIR GIRL

The girl with golden hair thinks she is handicapped, but she only thinks she is; and the boy who pokes fun at her, and looks for a white horse when he sees her coming, is only joking. And yet it is a fact that an over-sensitive girl does not feel quite comfortable because of the shade of her hair. And to make matters worse some thoughtless people tell her about it. They do not really mean it. Even at that it is not right, because the feelings of sensitive persons should always be respected. And red-haired people, especially girls, are quite sensitive on this point. But jesters and joke-smiths rarely stop to think when they see a chance to flash something that will start a laugh. Nor do they care if it does hurt a bit. The joke-smith takes the same liberties with her red hair as with the mother-in-law, the stovepipe or country jokes, and with no more seriousness. If you don't like red hair can you give a sane reason why you don't? If you have a golden-haired sweetheart you will not be able to find one bit of objection to the color. In fact it will become beautiful, and you wouldn't have it changed. There are sweethearts and sweethearts, but none like the red-haired variety—not exactly like it. Not that they are more stylish, dignified and upish, but that they are more heartsome and more wholesome, so to speak. The red-haired girl is spiritually different from her dark-haired and blonde sisters and that is why she is red-headed. You see it is spiritual quality that gives physical expression to the individual. This is the rule, and the exceptions thereto are almost invariably due to the individual not having been born right; that is, not having properly mated parents or those so heavily possessed of defects that they gave them as legacies to their children. You will probably find, when you come to think it over, that your reasons for not liking red hair are merely woman's likings—you don't like it just because you don't like it. Fortunately some do like it, and like it so well that they prefer red-haired partners on excursions, at picnics and at the marriage altar. Of course, there are some red-haired people who are bad, and when they are bad they are sure enough bad.
