The Cass bill passed by the legislature means an advanced period in Ohio road building. It provides for main market and inter county highways through villages. It provides for the erection of guide posts and the dragging of dirt roads. It provides that county commissioners may improve county roads through municipalities. The latter provision will prove helpful in many instances.

Every week after the Herald is printed communications are received which are intended for publication that week. In most cases the communications would have no news value the following week and find their way to the waste basket. The Herald is glad for letters from its patrons and friends but they should see to it that they reach this office in time for publication.—Louisville Herald. Same here.

A Sebring correspondent writes: Alliance does not put Sebring in the shade with prosperity. Sebring is distinctively a pottery town and five potteries of Sebring are running to capacity and on overtime. These conditions are likely to continue for an indefinite period as orders continue to arrive in good volumes. While there is no boom in the pottery trade there is a steady demand and the Sebring potteries are in the lead of the United States clay industry. We shake hands with Alliance on the improvement in business conditions.

The season of cabbage worms is drawing near. Small butterflies visit the cabbages and deposit large numbers of eggs which hatch, producing the green worm, which eats the leaves. One of the very best remedies is white hellebore. Apply as a spray, one ounce to three gallons of soapy water. The soap makes it stick to the leaves. Apply as often as the worms become numerous. There is absolutely no danger, as the hellebore loses its poisonous qualities in a short time when exposed to the air. Therefore, it must be fresh when applied. It is a vegetable having poisonous properties and comes in powdered form.

The subject of making good earth roads is one upon which volumes have been written and yet there is not much improvement in that kind of highway. Just now most of the roads of Nimishillen township are being torn up like cornfields. Sod and soil is being piled a foot high in the middle of the roads, making travel difficult and uncomfortable. The plan upon which the township officials are working is that if the ditches are opened and the road crowned the water will be given an opportunity to run away. The theory probably is all right, but the result is bad roads for several months. It has been argued that sod should be hauled away but that could only be done at considerable expense.—Louisville Herald.

UP-HILL.

Does the road wind uphill all the way? Yes, to the very end.

Will the day's journey take the whole long day? From morn to night, my friends.

But is there for the night a resting place? A roof for when the slow, dark hours begin.

May not the darkness hide it from my face? You cannot miss that inn.

Shall I meet other wayfarers at night? Those who have gone before.

Then must I knock, or call when just in sight? They will not keep you standing at that door.

Shall I find comfort, travel-sore and weak? Of labor you shall find the sum.

Will there be bed for me and all who seek? Yes, beds for all who come.

KEEP WHITE ANT FROM TIMBER

Much Serious Damage Done by Termite in Large Cities of North and Throughout the Southern States May Be Avoided By Thorough Treatment.

The ravages of the white ant, which because of its insidious work in timber and wood structures is one of the most destructive insects of North America, can be limited by comparatively simple measures, according to the entomologists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. This pest, known scientifically as the termite, attacks bridges, timbers, wells, silos, telegraph poles, bean poles, mine props, fence posts and railroad ties, and the sudden crumbling of wharves, caving in of mines and the settling in of floors are sometimes directly due to its hidden borings. Such large cities as New York, Cleveland, St. Louis and Washington have known such serious depredations, and damage occasionally occurs as far north as Massachusetts and Michigan. Throughout the southern states the termites' ravages are even more general.

Some of the recommendations of the Department's entomologists for dealing with this pest are as follows: Forest products in contact with the ground should be impregnated with coal-tar creosote, which is a permanent preventive against attack by our native termites. Coal-tar creosote has many properties which would recommend its use in this respect, for it is also a fungicide, and, being insoluble in water, will not leach out in wet locations. These requirements furnish objections to many chemicals that otherwise are very effective insecticides.

The various methods of superficially treating timber, as by charring, by brushing or by dipping with various chemical preservatives, among which are creosotes, carbolineums, etc., have proven to be temporarily effective in preventing attack if the work is thoroughly done. If not thoroughly done termites enter through the untreated or imperfectly treated portions, especially through weathering checks and knots. Where the bases of poles, pine props, etc., are left untreated termites enter the timber from below, and avoiding treated portions come up through the interior. Charred timber is effective against termite attack for a period less than a year, although it is not seriously damaged at the end of one year. It will readily be seen that neither brushing nor spraying the exterior after placement, as is sometimes practiced, is effective in keeping out termites, since the portion that sets in the ground could not be treated, and it is usually at this point that termite attack occurs.

Before treating timber with chemical preservatives, especially where the brush method is employed, it is essential that the timber be thoroughly seasoned, otherwise penetration by the preservatives will be retarded.

Many patented wood preservatives, advertised as effective against wood borers, often merely contain simple preservatives, as for instance linseed oil, to which a slight odor of oil of citronella has been imparted, or contain simple poisons. For timber to be set in the ground, brush coatings with linseed oil are not effective against termites.

Impregnation with chlorinated naphthalene may prove effective against termites, as a preservative for wood-work in interior finish, where it is important that the preservatives should not "sweat" out or stain the wood. Treated wood blocks buried in the ground with termite-infested logs were not attacked after a test of nearly six months. Impregnation with paraffin wax was not effective in the Bureau of Entomology's experiments. If the wood is not in contact with the ground impregnation treatments with bichlorid of mercury and zinc chlorid are effective. The mercury and zinc in this form are both soluble in water.

How Ice Should be Stored for Country Use

Ice is a very perishable commodity, and therefore certain important principles must be considered in the construction of a place to store it. Investigators of the department consider that there are four important things to be considered in order to keep ice well. These are as follows:

- 1. The ice must have a minimum of surface exposed to the air or to the packing material. This is most easily accomplished by piling the ice in the form of a cube. A mass of ice 12 by 12 feet exposes less surface than the same tonnage piled in any form less nearly that of a cube or of a globe.
- 2. The keeping of good ice depends upon the completeness of its insulation, whereby it is protected from external influences, such as heat and air.
- 3. Drainage is important because of the lack of it interferes with the insulation.
- 4. The ice itself must be packed so as to prevent as completely as possible the circulation of air through the mass. The more nearly the mass of ice approaches that of a solid cube, both in shape and texture, the easier will be maintained the insulation, while the keeping problem. The keeping of ice, then, depends upon the shape of the mass, its insulation, its drainage, and its solidity.

During the past four years there has been a steady advance in price of each class of meat animals and milk cows.

Indigestion and Constipation.

"About five years ago I began taking Chamberlain's Tablets after suffering from indigestion and constipation for years without finding anything to relieve me.
