MONSTER STEEL PLANT

Youngstown Vindicator: The decision of the Carnegie Steel Company to erect bar mills on its McDonald site between Girard and Niles, now industrially consumed, every available piece of manufacturing land in the great Mahoning river valley beyond the Pennsylvania state line beyond Lowellville in the east and Warren to the west. With plans now under way for extension the 2 1/2 miles comprising the manufacturing belt of the Mahoning valley, will not be excelled by any like territory in the United States. The Alland-like growth and development of this wonderful manufacturing belt, is a source of wonder to steel experts and others in touch with the real situation. Most of the enterprise and energy developed in this gigantic undertaking, has been due to the integrity, patriotism and business abilities of Youngstown manufacturers and financiers. It was Youngstown men and local capital that made the Ohio Works and upper mills possible, and this start in steel making institutions entering into and being consumed by the United States Steel Corporation organization, causing the combine to enlarge and expand to keep these valuable modern and up-to-date. It was in 1907 that the Carnegie Steel Co. spent $8,000,000 on extensions at the Ohio Works, building a complete open hearth plant, additional blast furnaces and great power plant. Recently $2,000,000 additional has been or is being spent on extensions to the open hearth smelting department. The Republican Iron & Steel Co., later appropriated $25,000,000 for extensions at Lansingville. Other appropriations have since been added, and some quite recently. The Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. one of the big factors in the development of the Youngstown district, has spent vast sums on its most complete independent plant in the country. At Lowellville in the east, the Ohio Iron & Steel Co. and Youngstown Iron & Steel Co. have made big improvements in new plants and extensions. In Warren and Niles independent sheet manufacturing companies, including the Brier Hill Steel Co., have added much to the industrial greatness of the western section.

The President and the Opponents of Preparedness. If the reported announcement by Chairman Kitchin that he has secured enough votes to beat in the House the proposed preparedness program of the President is correct he has certainly placed the Chief Magistrate in a peculiarly embarrassing position before the country and before the party which he is presumed to lead. That there has been most active work done within the Democratic party against this policy of the President is known to all, but that a measure of such transcendent importance to the country as its preparedness will be denied almost the great Senate or the House The Enquirer cannot believe. It is very possible that enemies of the President within his own party, with intention of administering to him some kind of an official rebuke, may be able to muster a majority in the House and military schedules which he approved of, but that the opponents of preparedness can obtain a majority against providing ample and efficient naval and military forces for the defense of this country is not possible when the Senators and Representatives well know the great majority of their constituents favor augmentation of the navy and the army and stronger protection for our harbors and our coasts. This session of Congress is but 30 days on its course, and there is already abundant evidence that the administration finds it difficult to secure approval in a number of instances of its measures and policies. We will not attempt to go into details, nor to closely analyze the situation, but to use a simile which is well understood by all, the President, there seems that not only one, but a number of monkey wrenches have been thrown into the party and legislative machinery. If Mr. Kitchin and his supporters so defeat in the House the President's preparedness measures and all measures for preparedness, it will be of little use for the Democratic party to put up any candidate for the Presidency this year. Mr. Kitchin may be a believer in the one-term presidential plank of the Baltimore Convention, and he may be showing an endeavor to make the plank effective in the case of the present incumbent, but, if so, he can obtain no advantage as yet over the President, for nothing authoritative has come from him as to desiring another term. If the President is not supported by his party in the Congress he can scarcely expect to be supported by it in this year's campaign at the polls, and, as we said above, as yet he has given no public notice that he desires to be a candidate for re-election. That one-term plank may be the plank of the Baltimore platform which will receive his warmest approval but get through with discussion of his Administration measures. If this Congress should fail to provide fully for the defense of the country, for preparedness to meet successfully all foreign attacks, there will be a great emptying of congressional seats of those responsible for such failure when the voters cast their ballots next November. (Cincinnati Enquirer.)

IFs If every one was paid all they believe their services are worth, there wouldn't be money enough in the world to meet the pay roll. If everyone always told us the truth sometimes we'd be mighty uncomfortable. If you and I were known to possess unflinching memory we'd have to give up our jobs in order to mail all the letters that would be entrusted to us.
