Brends a Union Between the but to follow God's works and the end North and South—He Leis the Cat out of the Bag!

"Let the South go—it is the traitors (meaning the Democrats) of the North which we are after." Thus said Senator Hale in the Senate of the United States, before the inauguration of Mr. Lincoln. If we recollect rightly, the above were his very words. It is a part of public history that this was the original intentions of the Republicans: to let the South go and then erect a Northern Confederacy, and "Sex-in her tenderest place, when you in the supposed to care much for the perpetuity of our institutions. But while they could get men to fill a great army and moncy to fill their coffers, they would keep up a show of exclusive loyalty and love for the Union, but still public satisfactory—the tax-gatherers and we could to prevent it—you did all you ucated to detest the Union, and who would people clamored for a change.

That change came in the only way it could come, by the success of the Democratic ticket in the States. In re-united country as the end, and the complete success of the Democratic party and institutions. This is the trouble in the West, who echo your howls to the "pro-slavery," as he calls it, just as it always was, and no more so than it always was, and no more so this the Republicans see nothing but a States where slavery exists choose to abolish it, and then they must not send their free negroes here. It is this: your ambition, from that moment thought of without horror! It we speak Mr. Greeley has learned, not too late, perhaps, but too well, that if Mr. Lincoln, after his serpentine course, disreputable even to M-policy, should undertake to negotiate a DIVISION OF THE UNION, that the West would at once declare herself independent of the East and make her own terms and establish her own commercial policy, and form her own associations. This would draw Pennsylvania, New York league, and New England with her sentences. They indicate desperation who wastes that indignation upon the loss of high tariffs and "universal Yankee notions" would be left to choose what she would then do "to be saved."

The process is not only simple but certain as fate.
