Vitalizing Vision.

That Western Kansas town of Hays, is again bidding for attention. This time it is about to complete the new Sheridan Coliseum, one of the most pretentious college buildings in Kansas, and a preliminary celebration will be held there next week. But this isn't all that Hays is doing.

The school faculty refused to be content with developing a Normal School which has been become nationally famous. It decided that schools should do more than graduate well trained and make successful experiments. Hays, an infant in Kansas educational institutions, took itself seriously as a community developer. The Normal School jumped right in behind everything that would develop Western Kansas.

This is the cause of Western Kansas taking to grand opera. The daring evolutions in the upper register will go to far Western Kansas for the first time next week when a Verdi opera will be sung at Hays. A creditable cast will be necessary, too, because the Normal School has developed a musical appreciation that would be disaster for the unfinished artist. In one way this is the best missionary work the Normal has done. It is similar to the exceptional success of Lindsborg, in making the waste places musically rich.

Where the frontier was a few years ago, even in the memory of many who will read this, the wonderful agency of school and music has worked so that the buffalo roar and the Indian whoop have been changed to something more expressive of the better elements in man. Results are visible now of progress. Hays is the Western Kansas town with a past so rich in consistent and lasting progress that its future as an empire builder grows brighter with every achievement. Hays has the spirit of the West—the ability to harness hard work to a splendid vision—Editorial in Salina Journal.

Dr. P. P. Claxton, National Commissioner of Education, recently said: "America owes very much to the Reformation. American life grew largely out of the spirit and ideals of the Reformation. American institutions were shaped and fashioned by it. The spirit of the Reformation was abroad in Europe, while America was in its infancy and many of the men who came to this country to establish a new civilization were driven by the desire of freedom which the Reformation has engendered, and brought with them the ideals which the Reformation had brought forth."

The Ballot Law Veto.

Repeal of the Massachusetts ballot would have been a step backward, and Gov. Capper's veto of the bill, though regretfully sent to the legislature in view of the urgent pressure brought upon him by his party colleagues in both houses, who has succeeded in passing the bill by a bare majority, will be gratifying we believe to reasonable men and women of all parties, and irrespective of party.

The Governor was urged to sign this bill on party grounds. It is not a meritorious argument for legislation that party interests requires it or is promoted by it. And in this case there is plenty of reason to think that the party men advocating a return to the party-circle tickets are mistaken in believing that it would promote party interests. It is certainly a fallacious idea that voting-in-the-circle is necessary to Republican victory in Kansas. The Republican party is the party of progress, of intelligence and of effective action in this state, and always has been. It can get along with most intelligent sort of franchise and the most advanced ballot.

As a matter of fact, the Massachusetts ballot is gaining every day in popular backing. Though a comparatively new form of ballot it has already approved itself to nineteen states. This ballot does not require greater intelligence than the average voter gives to his duty in the polling booth, but the truth is that there are fewer spoiled ballots under this system than under any other.

But what the Massachusetts ballot does require is a little time in the booth, devoted to study of the ticket and the ballot. It invites intelligent, thoughtful and discriminating action at the polls. On the stump and his newspapers, Gov. Capper has been a consistent champion of the Massachusetts ballot. This has been perfectly well known and his veto of the bill repealing this form of ballot was to be expected. It will be generally approved we believe, by the people of Kansas. —Topeka Capital.

Seal Originally Land Animal.

It is a curious fact that the fur seal was once a land animal. The baby seals are actually afraid of the water; they would drown if thrown into it, and have to learn to swim by repeated efforts. When once they have been taught to swim, however, they soon forget to walk.

Powerful Lighthouse Lenses.

Several French lighthouses have been equipped with lenses that enable their lights to be seen from 50 to 60 miles at sea.
