MRS. BRADFORD NAMED AUDITOR OF NATIONAL FEDERATION OF CLUBS

The many friends in this city of Mrs. E. Bradford, and especially the musicians of Albuquerque, will be delighted to learn that Mrs. Bradford was yesterday named as auditor of the National Federation of Musical Clubs, which is now in session in Los Angeles. The federation is made up of the ablest musicians of the country, and the convention which is now being held in Los Angeles is one of the big events in musical circles of the United States.

Mrs. Bradford, who is one of the most talented musicians in Albuquerque, is the representative of the state of New Mexico in the national federation. She left several days ago for Los Angeles to attend the convention. Her selection as one of the national officers of the organization is no less a compliment to Albuquerque and New Mexico than to Mrs. Bradford.

The Associated Press dispatch conveying the news of the election of officers of the federation is as follows: "Mrs. A. J. Ochsner of Chicago was named today as president of the National Federation of Musical Clubs by the nominating committee. The other nominations were Mrs. W. H. Jamison, Los Angeles, first vice president; Mrs. W. A. Rinkie, Peoria, second vice president; Mrs. Adelaide Carman, Indianapolis, third vice president; Mrs. George Hall, Providence, fourth vice president; Miss Charloita Simmonds, Duluth, recording secretary; Mrs. J. S. Morris, Wagon, Wis., treasurer; and Mrs. E. L. Bradford, Albuquerque, N. M., auditor."

CULTURE AS A CIVIC ASSET IS ENLOR'S THEME

President of State Normal De-livers Able Address to Students of Summer School in Old Palace at Santa Fe.

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE TO MORNING JOURNAL.) Santa Fe, June 29.—Culture is the greatest need and asset of any city, state and of the nation—that was the theme of President E. Enloe of the State Normal school at Silver City, in his address before the summer school at the Old Palace last evening. That is the justification, he said for the spending of public money and the giving of public property for higher education.

"I begin with the proposition," he said, "that in every circumstance, condition, occupation, avocation and profession, the college-bred man is at an advantage over the man who has not had that training." "With this assumption as the starting point then it seems to me that the argument for state support of institutions of higher learning, centers upon two main propositions: First, by its support of such institutions the state affords to every citizen the opportunity for mental training and the acquisition of knowledge whereby he is made able to achieve the amount of success desired by himself; and second, by affording all its citizens the chance for higher culture the state assures itself efficient administration and wise counselors without whom it should soon cease to exist." The speaker then elucidated these two propositions, compared the culture of Egypt which made learning a secret of the earth and powerful with the culture of Greece in which every Greek citizen had his share, quoting Wendell Phillips.

President Enloe pointed out that "of all the systems of government ever devised that of the federal union is the most complex and involved. None other is so difficult to conduct, and none other requires so much wisdom to conduct successfully." He then enumerated the men of higher culture who founded this government, who devised the system, the scholars James Otis, John Morin Scott, John Jay, John Adams, the Livingstones, "scholars all," and "it was not by accident that of the fifty-five members of the constitutional convention thirty-three were college graduates, and that the important part of the eight acknowledged leaders of the great debate were college men. The constitution of the United States is the work of American scholars. Was not the work well done?" And in the next breath he said: "It was Daniel Webster, and John Quincy Adams and Charles Sumner; it was Wendell Phillips, Parker and Beecher and Whittier and Longfellow and Lowell and Emerson and Curtis who quickened the national conscience. It was Grant and Sherman and Sheridan and Thomas and Hancock, who led to victory; still later, it was Dewey and Sampson, Soley and Lawton and Roosevelt and Farnston, college men, whose names were lifted out of the mists."

"Surely, it is as true now as it was when George William Curtis said it twenty years ago, 'Take from the country at this moment all its art gallery and what would remain? With the army its general, from the ship its compass, from the national action its main spring.'"

The speaker paid tribute to the national giants who were not college men, but who, like Lincoln, fought with greatest strength and happiness, who took advantage of such means as culture as Santa Fe possesses in its summer school, its museum, its art gallery and what remains mainly with the people of the desert. These the state and the city provide free to its children and its citizens. And is it worth while?" Mr. Enloe answered: "Wherever great principles have been at stake the scholar has been the leader. The scholar has devised our scheme of government, has framed and interpreted our wisest laws. The scholar has fought with our ships, and led our armies. Are these slight services? Have they been bought too dearly with the dollars the country paid to educate them?" "If this country would live it must educate its people."

President Enloe was loudly applauded. Miss Beth Sturdevant, a member of his faculty, delighted and charmed the audience which filled the assembly room, with a recital of "Peg o' My Heart," giving not only a splendid synopsis of the popular play, but reciting dialogues from it in which "Peg's" Irish accent and intonation were reproduced in inimitable manner and gesture. It was a dramatic and Miss Sturdevant had to reply to an encore with a Scotch love ballad that was equally as fascinating.

President Enloe and Miss Sturdevant left today for the Peoa valley. President Rupert F. Asplund was in the chair last evening and made the summer school announcements. Superintendent of Public Instruction Alvan N. White introduced the speaker of the evening.
