

ALLEGED NEGROES LOOTED FEDERAL LIQUOR LOCKER

Two Employees of Postoffice Building and a Club Porter Are Arrested by Snyder and His Men.

Wholesale and systematic stealing of confiscated liquor from the vault in the basement of the Albuquerque federal building led to the arrest yesterday of three enforcement officers under the direction of Director D. W. Snyder of Morris Porter, engineer, and H. M. Wilson, janitor, at the federal building, and John Weddington, who is said to have acted as the agent for the disposal of stolen whisky.

All of the men arrested are colored. Director Snyder said last night that the bottles containing whisky stolen from the vault had been found in the possession of all three of the men. In addition, the officers have in their possession an affidavit from a man who states that he has purchased whisky from both Porter and Wilson, and that the liquor was delivered to him on various occasions at 5 o'clock in the morning in the engine room of the federal building. The affidavit states that the purchaser paid a standard price of $10 a quart for whisky and $6 a quart for tequila.

All Bonded Whisky. The amount of bonded whisky stolen was not known, but officers say the thefts have been going on for several months.

The prohibition enforcement officers have a systematic method of storing confiscated liquors in a metal vault with a barred door similar to those used in jails. They began to notice during the summer that while the rows of shelves on the front of the vault were untouched, a large number of bottles on the rear rows were disappearing. Special agents and detectives were placed in the building on numerous nights, but the thieves continued. Locks on the door were changed four times, but always they were picked. Finally, a lock that was guaranteed to defy the efforts of the most skillful burglar was placed on the vault, but the thieves removed it by cutting the heavy chain by which it was attached to the door.

Four Cases Disappear. A few weeks ago, when a particularly big haul of bonded whisky was placed in the vault, the officers found a few days later that four cases of the liquor had disappeared. They then marked a large number of the bottles, and replaced them on the shelves. Under cover of night, an employee made the acquaintance of Porter, from whom he succeeded in buying three bottles of whisky that bore the tell tale marks.

The next move was to get a search warrant for the residences of Porter, 130 East Lead avenue, and of Wilson, 1301 South Arno street. Stolen whisky, the officers said, was found at both places.

Positive evidence was found, the officers said, that John Weddington had been selling the stolen liquor in the market. He was arrested at his residence, 221 North Third street.

Reports also reached the officers that Andrew Phillips, a colored night porter at the Elks club, had been selling whisky to a chosen number of his friends at various places in the city. Phillips has been summoned as a witness at the hearing of Porter, Wilson and Weddington, which will be held Monday before United States Commissioner Lawrence Bliss. The three men have been locked up in jail awaiting the hearing.

Director Snyder said last night that the thieves could have been frightened away from the vault, but the officers preferred to lay a trap and catch them. In view of the extraordinary efforts made to protect the liquor from molestation, he said, it was surprising how readily the thieves managed to get into the vault.

All liquor stored is catalogued and put away in a methodical manner, so that not so much as one bottle or jug can be taken or even tampered with without the officers knowing of it.

An Appetizing Odor. Because of the large amount of liquor stored in the vault, in jugs, bottles and other containers that are not entirely air tight, the odor of spirits and malted beverages is apparent near the elevator shaft and in parts of the lobby almost continuously. The officers believe that this temptation was too great for the colored employees and that they were drawn to the contraband stock like flies to molasses.

Hundreds of dollars worth of whisky and gin, at the prices at which those beverages now sell, are believed to have been taken by the negroes. A careful check is being made to determine the extent of the robberies. The officers have evidence that makes them believe that all of the stolen liquor was sold here in the city, and that a considerable part of it was drunk by those who stole it.

CHILDREN AND AGED FOLK IN NEED OF HELP

Donations of Clothing and Bedding Requested by Captain Guest of the Charities Bureau.

There are children in the city who shiver all night because they have no bed coverings, and who cannot go to school in the daytime because they have not sufficient clothing.

There are old people whose declining years are being spent in hunger and discomfort. There is a wide range in the city with 11 children to support, and she has not the physical strength to meet the task. Even if she were as strong as the strongest man, she could not earn enough to support her family.

Because of a delayed train, Hugh B. Woodward, chairman of the republican state committee, was unable to be present. He sent a wire, which was read to the meeting, expressing his regret. Charles Mann, Jr. of Old Albuquerque, inquired of Congressman Montoya why he had not been appointed postmaster upon his return from the army and having passed a civil service examination and received a high grade. Mr. Montoya replied that there had been charges of pro-Germanism against both candidates for the appointment. Charles Mann, Sr., the young man's father, arose and said heatedly: "Do you dare to call my son who fought for his country a pro-German? Come on boys, let's get out of here." About twenty of the young men present left the hall.

The court also in its answers to the certified questions from the Dallas court of civil appeals, held that the appellates were without authority to institute and maintain the injunction and therefore the district court is without jurisdiction. gauts were being held, another group gathered at the grave of Roosevelt in Oyster Bay. There his old neighbors, officers from the navy, delegations from patriotic societies and a thousand Boy Scouts to whom the visit has become an annual pilgrimage, listened to a simple reading of the Twenty-third psalm and watched the placing of a wreath on the grave. The voice of Mrs. Roosevelt was one of those blended in the prayer.

The meeting in Carnegie hall tonight closed the day's ceremonies of Roosevelt's birthday. Senator Pepper, the principal speaker, said: "Today we are rejoicing because Theodore Roosevelt has been born again. There is not a tinge of sadness in our celebration. The immortality of his influence makes us glad with an exceeding great joy."

"We are here tonight to be baptized into his spirit," he added. "Pray God that it may be a total immersion. We need to be immersed in his cheerful courage."

Senator Pepper said that moving forward never scared the colonel. "Theodore Roosevelt's greatest service was the vindication of forward marching as essential to the life of free government," he continued. "In order to accomplish this vindication, he was even willing to step for a moment outside his party; but the instant his principle was grasped and accepted by republican leaders, the need for a third party ended. The progress is too fast for some and too slow for others. But it is the maximum rate consistent with order and coherence. It is due to him that his party is at once fast and steady. It is today the great stabilizing force within the republic."
